OLD MEDICAL BUILDING - UNIVERSITY OF LOUISVILLE

Date: 1837-1838, rebuilt 1856.

Style: Greek Neo-classicism.

Architects: Built in 1837-38 by Gideon Shryock, destroyed by fire and rebuilt with some changes by Henry Whitestone in 1856.

Original use: Medical building.

Other uses: The building was used for many years by the Board of Education of Louisville as Central High School for Negro students. Several years ago it was purchased by the City of Louisville.

Present use: Storage room for the Louisville Free Public Library.

Note: The cupola which was originally on the building was almost a trademark of Shryock and of his master, William Strickland of Philadelphia. When the building was rebuilt by Whitestone he omitted the dome, added a balustrade around the roof, removed the basement windows and added small attic windows. Over the Ionic portico Whitestone put a triangular pediment where Shryock had the dome. He also reduced the windows from four to three on either side of the portico.
