The land of is situated in a grove of fir trees on the west bank of This small Gothic Revival building has a linear plan with a South-facing tower, vestibule and nave comprising the main section and offices and class-rooms in a small wing with an ell on the east side at the rear. The church has been in continuous use since 1878.

The interior finish with wainscot, plaster walls, coved ceiling, and simple benches is much the same as Oregon churches of the late 1850s, except that there is a center pointed arch applied to the wall at the channel end surrounding what appears to be a slightly recessed wall area. The exterior however differs greatly from the earlies Classic Revival style churches. Verticality is emphasized in both mass and the board and batten exterior wall finish. Wood buttressing has been used between the three side window bays and on the corners of the main section and tower. The buttresses extend about 3/4 of the distance to the eave line. The tower half of which is set into the first bay of the nave has an octagonal gabled belfry and is surmounted by an eight-sided spire. There is a miniature rose window set in the tower front. The main doors in the vestibule under the tower are set within a pointed arch. Gothic windows with plain panels of colored glass are set in the front on either side of the tower and in each of the three bays of the nave.

There have been alterations to the rear wing and a basement, with access by an exterior concrete stair well, has been added. The church building has been in continuous use since 1878 and it and the adjacent churchyard cemetary are well maintained.
