Registration Form

This form is for use in nominating or requesting determinations for individual properties and districts. See instructions in How to Complete the National Register of Historic Places Registration Form (National Register Bulletin 16A). Complete each item by marking "x" in the appropriate box or by entering the information requested. If an item does not apply to the property being documented, enter "N/A" for "not applicable." For functions, architectural classification, materials, and areas of significance, enter only categories and subcategories from the instructions. Place additional entries and narrative items on continuation sheets (NPS Form 10-900a). Use a typewriter, word processor, or computer, to complete all items.

The Whitehaven Hotel, a three-story, mansard-roofed frame structure, is located on a lot facing the Wicomico River in the village of Whitehaven, Wicomico County, Maryland. Oriented with a south facing front, the large U-shaped hotel rests on a low brick pier foundation, and the exterior is clad with plain weatherboard siding mixed with a few beaded weatherboards. The steeply pitched mansard roof is covered with asphalt shingles. Built in several stages, the center core of the hotel is a Federal side hall/parlor dwelling, erected around 1810-1815. The braced timber frame house survives with much of its early 19th century interior woodwork. The exterior, on the other hand, was reworked when a large hotel addition was attached to the west gable end and a mansard roof replaced the previous gable roof. Extending to the east side of the Federal house is a turn of the 20th century frame addition with a two-story bay window on its south facade. Also on the property is a (non-contributing) single-story 20th century frame garage.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION:

The Whitehaven Hotel stands on the east side of Whitehaven Road facing the Wicomico River in the village of Whitehaven, Wicomico County, Maryland. Facing south, the three-story frame hotel is oriented on an east-west axis.

Built in three principal stages, the hotel is a roughly U-shaped building supported on brick piers and clad with a combination of plain weatherboards and a few remnant beaded weatherboards. Two-thirds of the current structure is covered by a mansard roof, while a two-story east end wing is covered by a low pitched gable roof.

The south (main) elevation is an asymmetrical five-bay facade with an uneven series of door and window openings marking the first floor. A wraparound front and side porch, the deteriorated floor of which remains, formerly sheltered the first floor. The porch posts and some of the decorative corner brackets are stored inside the building. The eastern three-bay portion of the mansard roofed main block comprises an early 19th century (c.1810-1815) two-story, side-passage, single-pile plan dwelling, which was incorporated within the larger hotel structure around 1883. The three-bay elevation of the original house includes a partially glazed side door topped by a three-light transom. Located to the right of the entrance are several short sections of beaded weatherboards. The two bays to the left of the entrance are defined by two-over-two sash windows. Three two-over-two sash windows light the second floor of this section. The two-bay wide, double-pile, ca. 1883 addition covers the west end of the Federal house and is marked on its south side by a second entrance fitted with a heavily molded, four-panel door with arched top panels. There is a two-light transom overhead. A nine-over-six sash window, undoubtedly reused from the early 19th century house, fills the window opening to the left of the second entrance. The second floor wall is pierced by a pair of six-over-six sash windows. Unifying the uneven five-bay facade is a mansard roof, distinguished by a center gable which is also executed with a mansard roof line. A six-over-six sash window pierces the center of the gable, and six-over-six sash gabled dormers mark the roof slope to each side. An historic photograph of the hotel indicated the former presence of decorative sawnwork that embellished the inside corners of the front gable. Rising through the center of the hotel is a large brick chimney stack.

The west side of the hotel, which faces Whitehaven Road, is a three-bay facade with two sets of double doors occupying the center and northern bays. Each of the double-door openings are topped by transoms. A large two-over-two sash window pierces the wall to the south. The second floor is pierced by three evenly spaced six-over-six sash windows, and the third floor boasts a center mansard-roofed gable and flanking six-over-six sash dormers.

The north wall of the ca. 1883 hotel addition is defined by a single, large, two-over-two sash window on the first floor and single, six-over-six sash windows on the second and third floors. The rear wall of the early 19th century house was covered by an early 20th century infill structure, which deteriorated and was torn away during the past few years.

The east end of the main mansard-roofed hotel is covered by a two-story, asbestos shingled, ca. 1900 addition which has a low pitched gable roof and a two-story bay window on the south facade. The south and east walls are marked by two-over-two sash windows, and a narrow brick stove chimney rises through the east side. This section has suffered serious structural decay due to a leaky roof.

The interior of the hotel retains much of its early and later 19th century woodwork. The first floor hallway retains the early 19th century staircase, although the handrail to the second floor was replaced during the late 19th century. A boldly turned newel post and turned balusters support a Victorian molded handrail. The rear entrance to the hallway survives with a Federal six-panel door with the two upper panels glazed. A six-panel door framed by an early 19th century surround provides access into the adjacent parlor on the west side of the hallway.

The parlor is fitted with early 19th century chair rail and baseboard moldings, however the Federal mantel has been removed and is stored in a local garage. Riven lath, fastened with cut nails, holds the plaster to the studs, and the yellow pine, tongue-and-groove flooring is original to the c.1810-1815 structure.

The second floor of the original house retains most of its early 19th century woodwork including the federal stair railing, six-panel doors, door surrounds, and baseboard moldings. The stair railing includes slender square newel posts, rectangular balusters, a molded handrail, and a pyramidal tapered newel post cap. At the head of the staircase is a small front room, now a bathroom, that is fitted with chair rail and baseboard moldings, and a narrow early 19th century surround frames the flat six-panel door.

The bedroom over the parlor retains Federal woodwork as well, which includes an original mantel, chair rail, and baseboard moldings. The mantel design follows a traditional early 19th century format with paneled pilasters that rise to paneled frieze blocks which support a molded shelf. A closet has been inserted in the northwest corner.

The third floor of the early 19th century house retains the upper portion of the Federal stair, which survives with a red and gray paint scheme. Evidence for the former attic partitions, including front and rear knee walls, are found in the wide, yellow pine flooring. Late 19th century partitions, with four-panel doors framed by plain surrounds, have been introduced to create multiple bedrooms.

The hotel interior on the west side has been left largely undisturbed since the late 19th century. The first floor is divided into two rooms with the hotel desk, reception counter, and staircase fitted into the southwest corner. Thin vertical beaded board walls enclose the reception area, and a cut-down store counter fronts the enclosure. The boxed staircase is accessed through a four-panel door featuring decorative paint on its inside face. The interior of the stairwell is fitted with narrow beaded boards which retain a grained finish as well. The ell-shaped upstairs hallway provides access to three rooms, and the four-panel bedroom doors are topped with movable two-light transoms. Several doors have a two-toned grained finish. There is no access to the third floor from the west side.

Standing to the rear of the hotel is a single-story frame garage sheathed with corrugated metal siding. The medium pitched gable roof is covered with asphalt shingles. A single six-over-six

Continuation SheetWHITEHAVEN HOTEL
Wicomico County
MarylandSection number 8 Page 6SIGNIFICANCE SUMMARY:

The Whitehaven Hotel is significant under Criterion C as an example of a type of hotel architecture which characterized the Lower Eastern Shore region in the late 19th century. The Second Empire style was chosen infrequently for residential architecture in the region, but was favored for hotels, where the style's characteristic tall mansard roof offered space for additional rooms. The Whitehaven Hotel is the only surviving mansard-roofed hotel in Wicomico County, and one of only three such buildings in the general region. The Whitehaven Hotel derives additional significance under Criterion A for its association with waterborne commerce in the region. Steamboats plying the Wicomico River in the late 19th and early 20th century stopped at the village wharf a short distance from the hotel; travelers en route between Princess Anne in Somerset County and Vienna in Dorchester County crossed the Wicomico by means of a ferry at Whitehaven. The hotel served commercial travelers and the general public, providing lodgings, meals, and various forms of entertainment. It is the sole survivor of a string of water-oriented commercial structures which existed in Whitehaven around the turn of the 20th century.

The Whitehaven Hotel is architecturally and historically significant. The Second Empire frame hotel, incorporating a ca. 1810-15 Federal side-passage, single-pile frame dwelling, is a distinctive example of riverfront commercial architecture on the lower Eastern Shore. Expanded around 1883 into a hotel in order to serve travelers passing by land or water, the U-shaped frame building dominated by a mansard roof is a local landmark that stands prominently along the Wicomico River. In spite of this obvious reference to this popular revival style, the exterior and interior embellishments are otherwise conservative and limited to porch and eave decoration. Aside from one other building in Whitehaven (WI-193, Otis Lloyd House), Second Empire buildings are not common to rural settings in the Lower Eastern Shore region; existing examples are mostly found in the urbanized Newtown district of Salisbury. The style was employed infrequently for residential buildings, but was favored for hotels, where the full third floor under the mansard offered space for numerous rooms. The Whitehaven Hotel is the only mansard-roofed hotel remaining in Wicomico County, and it is one of three examples located in the Lower Eastern Shore region. The two other hotels stand in Ocean City (WO-328, Mt. Vernon Hotel; WO-329, Mt. Vernon Hotel Annex).

The hotel building also reflects two principal periods of major building activity in Whitehaven; the early 19th century and the late 19th century. Although ferry operation at this location dates as early as the seventeenth century, there are no surviving buildings in the village which predate 1800. Apparently, during prosperous periods of the 19th and 20th centuries, most of the earlier dwellings were replaced. Reflective of this rebuilding is the ca. 1810-15 Federal house that serves as the core of the hotel. Since there are no eighteenth century dwellings remaining in the village center, the early 19th century dwellings comprise the oldest of Whitehaven's buildings. The late 19th century reworking of the house reflects a period of significant construction in Whitehaven as well as across the lower Eastern Shore. In Whitehaven, the largest part of the extant housing stock, around 53 percent, dates to the fourth quarter of the 19th century. With its bold mansard roof, decorative scrollwork, and interior paint decoration, the hotel is the most elaborate example of Victorian architecture in the village.

The Whitehaven Hotel is the last survivor of a string of historic commercial structures that lined Whitehaven's waterfront. As a hotel, the business was patronized by local salesmen and the traveling public, who crossed the Wicomico River on the ferry en route between Princess Anne in Somerset County and Vienna in adjacent Dorchester County. Nineteenth and 20th century steamboats plied the Wicomico River, stopping at the village wharf, which was located a short distance from the hotel. Steamboat passengers made use of the hotel services that included rooms, meals, and various types of entertainment.

The period of significance, ca. 1810-ca. 1945, was selected to begin with the approximate date of construction of the earliest section of the building and to end when the hotel ceased operations.

The Whitehaven Hotel was in operation as a hostelry for approximately sixty years between the early 1860s and the mid-1940s when the business was discontinued. The first mention of the property in use as a hotel is found in an 1886 transfer of the property to Charles and William Leatherbury, who purchased at auction the "lot or Division No. 3 containing 1 1/16 acres of Upland and 22 3/4 acres of Marsh . . . 23 13/16 acres more or less . . . being the main building with all the outhouses and lately used as a Hotel by Mrs. A. E. Brady."

The property remained under Leatherbury family ownership until 1897, and after 1900 the hotel was bought and sold several times until Robert W. Staton acquired it in February 1904. The Whitehaven Hotel remained under Robert W. Staton's ownership and operation for forty years. According to older residents who recalled the hotel operation during the early 20th century, visitors could sleep four to a bed for a quarter. The hotel was also a place for Saturday night dances as well as a location where people could buy a drink. After Staton sold the hotel property in 1944, it ceased to operate as a business and the hotel was used as a private residence. Currently it is in disrepair and efforts have been made to stabilize the structure from further deterioration.

Prior to its conversion into a hotel in the 1880s, the waterfront site was improved by a Federal dwelling which was built around 1810-15. The construction of the two-story, side-passage, single-pile house probably took place during the ownership of Littleton and Sarah E. Aires. Sarah had acquired what was known as the "Woodbine" or "Woodvine" lot, comprising 30 waterfront acres, from her mother Amelia, the widow of George Aires, Jr. George Aires, Jr. had purchased the property in 1806. Sarah and her husband Littleton retained ownership of the property until February 1840, and at that time they were recorded as residents of Baltimore County.

Littleton and Sarah Aires sold the waterfront acreage with the Federal house to Samuel White, who maintained ownership for nineteen years. Samuel White and his family are listed in the 1850 U.S. Census for Somerset County. Designated as a 49-year old farmer, Samuel White is grouped with his wife Betsey and six children. A son, Henry J. White, was identified as a sailor. On January 5, 1859, Samuel and Elizabeth White sold the "Woodvine Lot" to John W. Dougherty, who is identified in the 1860 U.S. Census as a 34 year old merchant. John W. Dougherty is listed in the census with an apparent business partner, Robert Robertson, as well as a blacksmith, Minus Downing. The merchant trade of Dougherty and Robertson is the first indication of a mercantile enterprise at this site.

The next principal owner of the "Woodvine Lot" was Ware Wainwright, who bought 31 acres with improvements from J. W. Dougherty on November 10, 1864. Wainwright also pursued the mercantile trade, and the 1870 U.S. Census for Wicomico County credits him with real estate and personal property valued at $18,500. (Whitehaven was located in the portion of Somerset County that was partitioned in 1867 to create Wicomico County.) Wainwright is designated seven years later on the 1877 Atlas at this site with the residence and store indicated by separate dots on the map. The business directory for the Tyaskin area listed Ware Winright [sic] as a Ware Wainwright retained ownership of his Whitehaven residence and store until 1878 when he conveyed title of the property to attorney Robert F. Bratton as a trustee. A little over a week later Bratton conducted an appraisal of the goods, wares, and merchandise in the Wainwright store and sold the contents at auction on May 9, 1878. The house, store, and lot were auctioned a month later, but due to an insufficient bid, the waterfront property was held back and sold privately in July 1879.

James H. Elliott was the next owner and proprietor of the store, but his death soon afterwards dictated that the land and improvements were to pass to his son, Edward J. Elliott. Edward J. Elliott held the property for three years, until insolvency forced another sale in 1886 to Charles and William Leatherbury.

During the 19th century, Whitehaven was the site of prosperous shipbuilding concerns, the location of weekly steamboat landings, and an active fishing business. Its convenient access to the town wharf made Whitehaven an important transshipment point for area tomatoes and other produce grown nearby and processed in locally owned canneries. With employment available in the shipyards and canneries as well as work on the water, the vital commercial, industrial, and agricultural economy supported the construction of modest sized dwellings in the village.

BOUNDARY DESCRIPTION:

Wicomico County Tax Map 65, Parcels 42, 119, 120

The boundary of the nominated property is shown on the plat which accompanies this nomination.

BOUNDARY JUSTIFICATION:

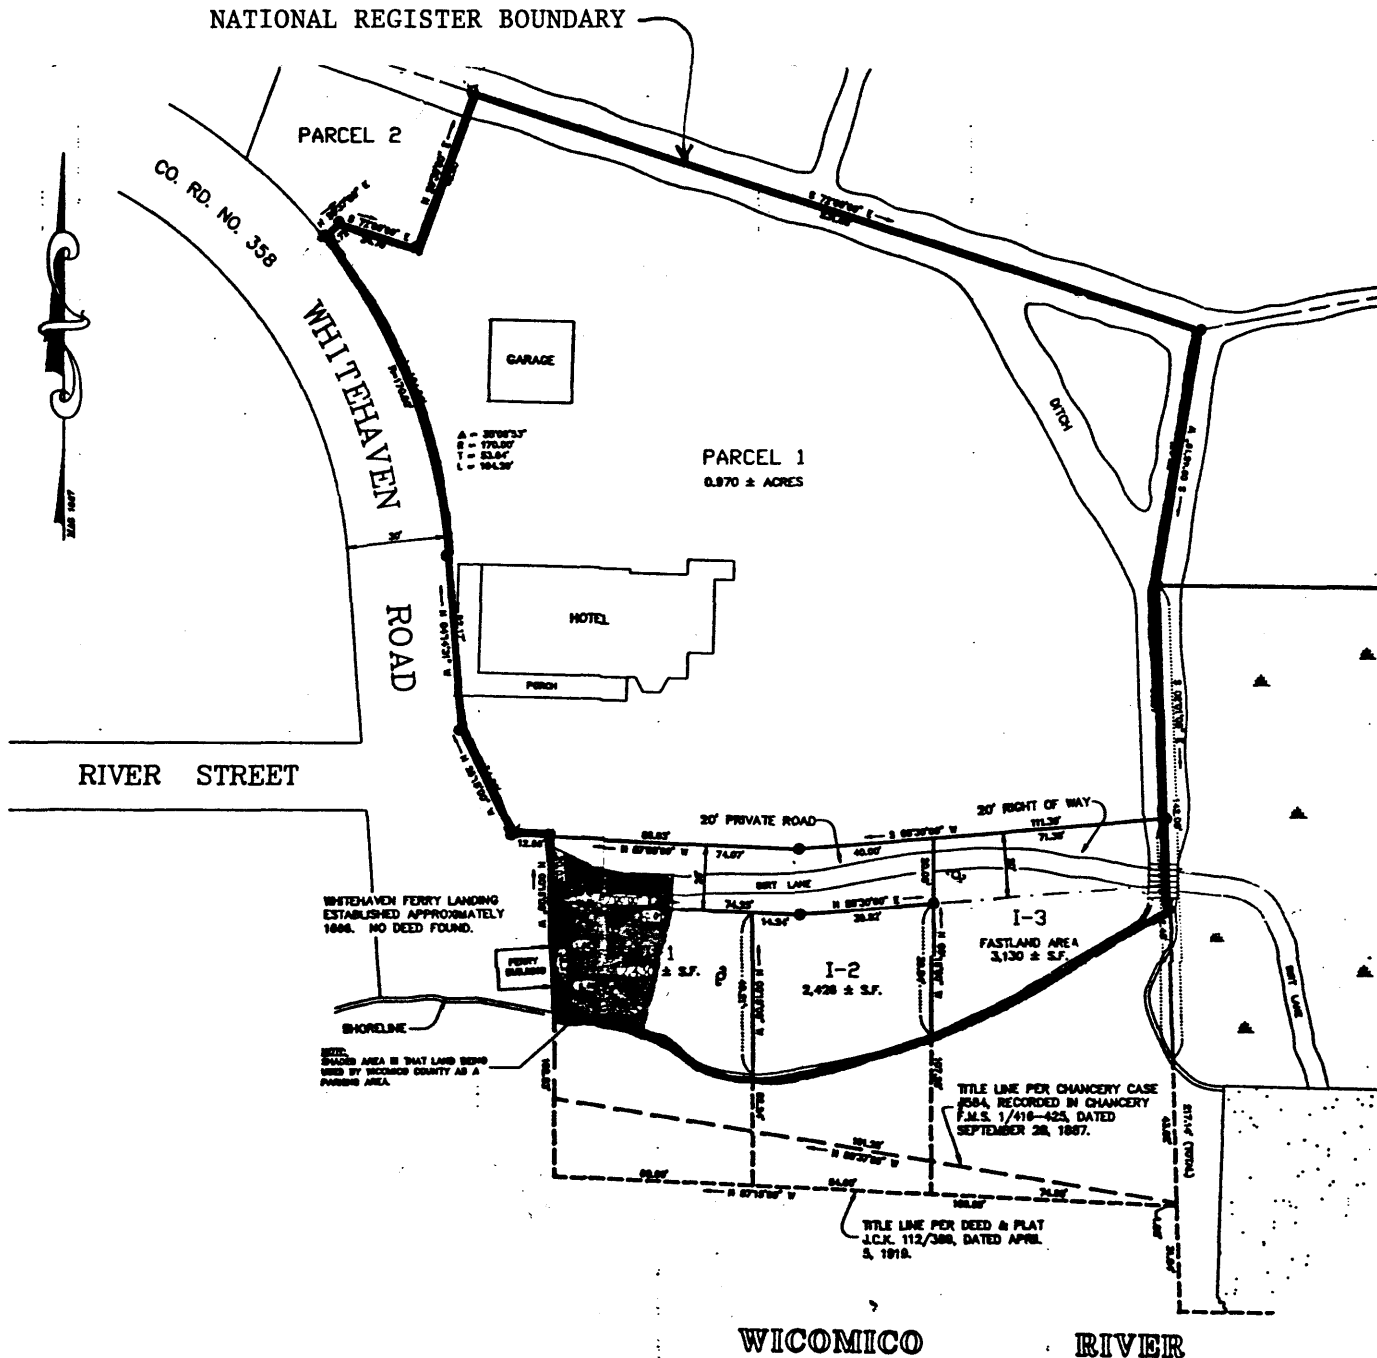

The nominated property, approximately 1.15 acres, includes the ground which immediately surrounds the building and constitutes its historic setting. The boundaries are defined by physical features. The southern boundary is the shoreline of the Wicomico River, and an unobstructed view of the river and surrounding marsh has been an integral part of the property since the early 19th century. The north and east boundary lines follow the courses of two ditches. The west line largely follows Whitehaven Road.
