SUMMARY

Located at the site of three former courthouses and encircled by the Murfreesboro business district, the Pike County Courthouse is the area's most impressive example of the Art Deco Style. Designed by the prominent architectural firm of Witt, Siebert and Halsey of Texarkana, the three-story building features the clean modernistic lines of the Art Deco Style. The present structure has been the center of political activity and community affairs since its completion in 1932 and still functions as a center of service to county citizens. A simple structure, yet striking in its style and design, the Pike County Courthouse is the only example of the Art Deco Style in the area and architecturally is one of the most significant building in Murfreesboro.

ELABORATION

Dominating the downtown area, the Pike County Courthouse rises above the surrounding buildings as Murfreesboro's most impressive structure. The three-story symmetrical brick and limestone structure faces north and consists of a cross plan with wings that project at four angles. The north elevation possesses a full-storied entrance projection within which a limestone frontispiece surrounds the third and second floor double windows and the replacement doors of the main entryway.

The first and second floors are separated by a limestone band embellished with a greek key and shield design above the entryway. Pilasters rise from the stone band on all corners of the structure and are capped with limestone blocks. Windows, originally six-over-six double-hung sash, were replaced with one-over-one ionized aluminum double-hung sash windows. A window lies between all corner pilasters at each story. East and west elevations possess two bays apiece separated by a pilaster placed off-center on each wall.

The east and west sides of the structure's rear section contain two windows in the one bay at every story. The south elevation is divided by pilasters into four bays with each bay possessing a window on each floor. Square towers lie at the inner southeast and southwest corners of the building and are capped with limestone blocks.

A limestone parapet tops the roof, which gently rises to a point above the full-storied entrance projection. The point is embellished with an inverted palmette and the parapet possesses a band consisting of alternate ovals and double-pointed arrows.

The interior consists of three floors with administrative offices on the first floor, a courtroom and judges chamber on the second floor, and what was once the county jail with two cells on the third floor. A new jail was constructed at a different location and the old one is no longer in use.

The main double-door entryway provides access to a circular foyer flanked by two curved staircases. Behind the foyer on the left and right two interior hallways lead to administrative offices. At the rear of the first floor a third stairway leads to a judge's chamber, which lies behind the courtroom.

The paired staircases, lined with vertical siding and chair rail molding, lead to a small vestibule and courtroom on the second floor. The courtroom is entered through double doors with five horizontal panels. The ceilings, once two stories in height to accommodate a balcony, are now suspended. Paneled-wood wainscot clads the walls and original wooden seats remain in the courtroom. Original nickel-plated and smoked glass light fixtures are representations of the phoenix.

Two jail cells on the third floor are accessible only by a stair on the east side of the courtroom.

Statement of Significance (in one paragraph)

SUMMARY

Located on the Murfreesboro court square, the Pike County Courthouse was constructed in 1932 with funds obtained through a bond issue of fifty-thousand dollars. Employing the finest architects, the structure was built upon the site of three former courthouses. The town's business district grew to surround this site where Pike County's political and governmental activity took place. Due to its role in community planning, politics, and government and as the only Art Deco Style structure in the area the Pike County Courthouse is an important representative of the history of Pike County.

ELABORATION

Built in 1932 at a cost of forty-five thousand six-hundred dollars, the Pike County Courthouse is the fourth structure to serve the area at the county government level.

Pike County was created by an act of the State Legislature in 1833 with the temporary county seat fixed at the home of Pascal C. Sorrells in the town of Zebulon. At a location near where the present structure stands the town built a log courthouse when the town changed its name to Murfreesboro in 1836. In the spring of 1855 the log structure burned, along with all county records to that date. The next courthouse, built in 1856 by contractors Moses and Jackson Brock, was a two-story frame building surmounted by a cupola. In 1895 the frame structure burned along with all records. The second courthouse was replaced by a two-story brick building constructed in 1897 and served the county until it was razed in 1932 to make way for the present structure.

Construction of the Art Deco building was funded through a fifty-thousand dollar bond issue. After its passage the architectural firm of Witt, Siebert and Halsey of Texarkana, Arkansas was employed to draw plans. In the October 23, 1931 issue of the "Pike County Courier" it was reported that a bid offered by contractors May and Sharp had been accepted and the building reached completion in March of 1932.

Art Deco-inspired courthouses were built throughout the 1930's in Arkansas. An Art Deco Courthouse much like the Pike County Courthouse stands in the town of DeQueen in Sevier County. Excepting later additions to the Sevier County Courthouse the floor plan is the same as the courthouse in Murfreesboro.

Due to the Pike County Courthouse's role in county government, its historic location and its distinctive Art Deco Style, the Pike County Courthouse is an important representative of Pike County's heritage.
