DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Springer Opera House designed by architect Daniel Matthew Foley was built in 1871 by Francis Joseph Springer, who had immigrated to Columbus, Georgia from Alsace. A remarkable number of its original characteristics have been retained.

The Opera House is enclosed in a three-storied solid red brick building, which was formerly a Victorian hotel. This massive structure occupies the northeast corner of First Avenue and 10th Street, and measures 145' x 150'. (The upper stories are now used for storage, and only the Opera House has been restored.) The upper two stories of the facade are enhanced by evenly-spaced windows framed with pressed-metal lintels and stone sills. A pressed-metal cornice also decorates the entire building.

The two front entrances are sheltered by a marquee which was added in 1902. The foyer, 14' x 29'-8", has a double doorway (6'-2") on the west wall. The foyer's gray-and-white marble floor is original. The cranberry flocked wallpaper is a reproduction of wall covering used during the period. A painted panelled wain-scoting, 3'-6" high, is below the wallpaper. The foyer now boasts a Victorian crystal chandelier.

The double coorway from the foyer leads to a room $19'-3'' \times 24'-6''$ with one window $4' 1-1/4'' \times 8'$, which has been made into a theatre museum. A plaster medallion and another Victorian crystal chandelier adorn the ceiling.

At the north end of the foyer are double doors, 7-1/2' 2-1/2'' wide, entering the rear of the auditorium; the seats, facing east, are served by two main aisles and side aisles. The seating area of the auditorim measures 65' x 68-1/2'; its seating capacity is 450.

The audience faces a stage 41' deep x 76' wide with a proscenuim arch 33' wide and 39' high. An extensive wooden grid, one of the very few left in America, flies 65' above the stage. The extensive use of wood as a building material has resulted in excellent accoustics for the building.

The original brass chandelier has been restored to its former elegance and hangs from the auditorium ceiling. A single row of tulip lights outline the supporting curve under the first balcony; many of these are original and exact duplications have been made for those which have disappeared through the years. Three=prong chandeliers hang in each box; many of these were found in the hotel rooms which surround the Opera House and were utilized in the boxes.

Stencilled borders, typical of the Victorian period, highlight the auditorium. The highly decorated border outling the proscenium arch is in its original state. The decorative work on the ceiling had to be restored due to severe

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Springer Opera House was opened in February of 1871. How Mr. Springer obtained financing for this sophisticated and elegant structure just six years after Appomattox is a mystery. The opening production was a "Grand Amateur Concert" presented by the ladies and gentlemen of the Trinity Episcopal Church. Through the years the theater continued to be a favorite with amateurs from throughout the Chattachoochee Valley area, but it has also played host to every great name of the late 19th and early 20th century American theater. Because of this, the theater is of national if not international importance.

Extensive research has been done regarding productions and performers appearing at the Springer. Microfilm detailing these accounts, beginning in 1871, has been exhaustively researched. The following list of personalities, including dates of appearance, shows not only actors but boxers, lecturers, and statesmen. The significance of this only partial list speaks for itself:

Katie Putnam - 1871

Buffalo Bill (W. F. Cody) - 1875

Edwin Booth - 1876

Frank Mayo - 1876

Fay Templeton - 1876

Blind Tom - 1879

The Springer continued as a legitimate theater through World War I and well into the 1920's, but then the Great Depression began to make itself felt, and finally and most effectively killed off the road shows, which were the life blood of it and other theaters like it throughout the country. It became a movie house, and began its long slide into near-oblivion.

water damage, but the original tracings were authentically reproduced. Money has not yet allowed for the replacement of the stencilled areas under the first balcony, but tracings of the design have been preserved.

The ceiling of the auditorium is approximately 60' in height. There are two balconies, the first seating approximately 250 people, has been restored for functual use. The second balcony, or "peanut gallery" was originally reached from a First Avenue entrance, and is in the original state with its wooden benches in tact. It is currently being used only for production lighting.

Due to stringent fire laws in the State of Georgia, steel enclosed staircases have been installed on either side of the auditorium in order to make the second balcony acceptable under current regulations.

Three tiers of boxes flank each side of the proscenium arch. adorned with columns boasting pressed-metal capitals. The lower level of boxes is elevated 3-1/2' from the auditorium floor; each box accomodates four seats. Original stencil work has been restored in the boxes.

The Springer was closed even as a movie house in 1959. The building stood deserted and vacant. There were numerous plans for it, most of which involved tearing it down. It seemed that time had run out for the Opera House. Attempts were made to save it, but none got off the ground, due to lack of funds, lack of leadership, or both.

In 1964 a group of interested citizens formed the Springer Board of Trustees, a board of the Springer Theater Company, and things began to move. The Trustees worked out a purchase agreement with the owner, and more on faith than anything else, launched a restoration attempt. It met wonderful community support, and, in addition, gained the endoresement of the National Trust for Historic Preservation.

Adding another dimension to the restoration and providing visual evidence of the Springer's past is a Theater Museum off the entrance lobby. It was initiated as a project of the Junior League of Columbus, and contains photographs, portraits, costumes and other memorabilia of the great names that have played the Opera House.

Adding to the significance of the Opera House is its location. It is directly across the street from a fourteen story, $12,500 million dollar Government building now under construction in the city of Columbus. It is also one block from a proposed civic center.

The Springer was recognized by the Georgia Historical Commission with the placement of a marker in 1967. In addition, it has recently been recognized by the "Connie" Award of the Society of American Travel Writers (September 5, 1971, in Helsinki, Finland). This was awarded "for the inspired work of...community leadership in Columbus, Geogia...saving the Springer is almost without parallel because it was entirely a local achievement unaided by Federal, State, or National foundation funds."
