DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Denison Homestead, also known as Pequotsepos Manor, is located on Pequotsepos Road in Old Mystic, Connecticut, approximately a quarter of a mile east of Route 27. The two-story central chimney house was built in 1717 by George Denison, a descendant of one of the four original settlers of Stonington, Captain George Denison. The house is sided with shakes and is presently run as a museum by the Denison Society, a family association.

An earlier house on the site, Captain George Denison's second on the site, burned just prior to his relative George's marriage. The appearance of the first home is unknown, while the Captain's second house was most likely a two story structure, described as his "mansion" by the Captain. Both of these early houses were fortified against Indian attack. Thus, the present Denison homestead is the third house on the site, built appropriately by the third generation of Denisons in Stonington. It is said some of the planks and timbers from the second house were used in the construction of the present Denison Homestead.

The house faces south on a rocky rise of land and is built directly atop a rock ledge. Consequently, only a portion of the cellar is excavated, beneath the southeast corner. The facade follows a standard nine window plan, centered with a rough-hewn six panel door. The single leaf door, c. 1800, retains its original hardware of three long straphinges and an ingenious combination latch/knocker. (See photo 3) A transom with five lights tops the door. There is a second entrance along the east wall. This opens onto a small rear chamber, once used as a bedroom and now functioning as a reception area for the museum. C. 1800, a one-story ell was added at the northwest corner. This ell, intended as a summer kitchen, was raised to a full two stories in the twentieth century. Sash throughout are twelve over twelve. Outside sash framing, shakes and roof shingles are modern but the remainder of the framing dates from the eighteenth century.

The interior of the house retains most of its original detail. The central entry illustrates the somewhat crude attempts of the colonial craftsman to be stylish. While rather rough, the turned balusters and pendants of the stairwell are nonetheless handsome. The staircase has two landings and a three-quarter turn. Similarly simple finishing can be seen in the southeast chamber on the second floor. Here, the summer beam, running northsouth, is uncased and crudely chamfered, as are the flared corner posts. The south plate is exposed. There is no fireplace panelling and the mantel appears to be a later addition, c. 1800. Floorboards here are approximately two feet wide. In the kitchen is an example of a trimmer arch, said to exist only in houses built along the coast from Hingham, Massachusetts to Stonington, Connecticut. I

In both front chambers on the first floor there are paired cased summer beams, running east and west. The corner posts are cased as are the girts. In the southwest chamber, the fireplace wall is simply panelled. A heavy colection molding surrounds the square brick fireplace. Similar panelling and fireplace treatment can be noted in the southwest chamber on the second

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Denison Homestead is a well maintained 1717 shingled house which preserves the way of life of succeeding generations of the descendants of one of Stonington's founders, Captain George Denison. From the time of its construction up to the present day, the house has been owned by Denisons. From 1654 to 1941, Denisons have lived on the site. Presently run as a museum, the house is entirely furnished with heirlooms accumulated over the years by the Denison family. In addition, the house was the last major restoration commission of Connecticut architect and author of Early Domestic Architecture in Connecticut, J. Frederick Kelly. The house is architecturally modest but nonetheless exhibits a level of craftsmanship evocative of its long and useful life.

Captain George Denison came to Roxbury, Massachusetts in 1631. He returned to England ten years later to fight for Cromwell, was wounded and married his nurse an Irishwoman, Ann Borodell. On his return to America, in 1651, he settled in New London, where he became Captain of the Train Band, or Militia. In 1654, he was granted 200 acres of land in reward for his services to the community. On these 200 acres, in what is now Stonington, Captain George built his home. His was one of only four English families living between the Thames and Pawcatuck Rivers. Captain George later fought in King Philip's War and was involved in the capture and execution of Canonchet, Philip's lieutenant.

In 1717, after the Captain's second home burned, his relative, also George, built the present Denison Homestead. Originally, this house was a story-and-a-half, but c. 1800, the roof was raised to a full two stories and a summer kitchen ell added. It is said that Indian slaves kept by the Denisons lived in the eaves of the house.

The house passed through eleven generations of the Denison family without a break until it was left as a museum to the Denison Society by the last owner, Mrs. Ann Borodell Denison Gates, in 1941. J. Frederick Kelly conceived the idea of a "successive" restoration which would utilize the wealth of furnishings and artifacts the family had accumulated and which would illustrate, via period rooms, the lifestyles of several generations. Thus, the kitchen, with its rare trimmer arch, appears as it would have in 1717. The southeast chamber illustrates Mrs. Gates' turn of the century parlor, while the southwest chamber is furnished as a Federal period drawing room. Upstairs, in the southeast corner, is a Revolutionary War period bedroom. The opposite bedroom is furnished with mid-19th century pieces, including a massive mahogany sleighbed.

floor, directly above. This panelling and the mantels throughout the rest of the house date c. 1800, indicating a major interior renovation at the time of the addition of the summer kitchen. It would seem that the raising of the rear wall to a full two stories from its former saltbox configuration occurred at the same time. Mortises for the original rafters of the lean-to can be seen in the northwest rear chamber of the second floor.

The house is entirely furnished with pieces accumulated over the years by succeeding generations of Denisons. Each room illustrates a different period in the house's evolution and is decorated with furniture of the appropriate period. In 1941, on the death of Ann Borodell Denison Gates, the last of eleven generations of Denisons to live in the homestead, the house became a museum. Restoration work was done by J. Frederick Kelly with interior decoration by Mrs. R.T. H. Halsey.

Also included on the property is a small barn with a pent roof and sided with shakes. A portion of the barn dates from the 18th-century, although several additions have been built on. Modern garage doors replace the original doors.
