Verbal Boundary Description:  See continuation sheet.

The boundary of the nominated property is the boulder to which the sculpture is affixed.

Boundary Justification:  See continuation sheet.

The Rhode Island Red is set in its original location. While the location of the sculpture in the town of Little Compton is integral to its significance, the significance of the work is not dependent on its specific setting here in this particular stone wall.

Description

This is a bronze relief, depicting a life-size rooster, accompanied by text, and surrounded by a simple molding worked in the bronze. The relief is set into the rough but flattened face of a natural granite boulder and is built into a stone wall in the village of Adamsville.

The rooster is seen in profile and faces right. The beak and comb and the tail and throat feathers are shown in fine detail; the back and breast feathers and the legs are depicted more softly.

The sculpture is 53'' high, 31'' wide, and about 2'' deep. The rooster is titled under the breast: "THE RHODE ISLAND RED." The lower third of the sculpture's face contains this text: "To commemorate the birthplace of the/Rhode Island Red breed of fowl which/originated near this location/--red fowls bred extensively by/the farmers of this district and later/named "Rhode Island Reds" and brought into/national prominence by the poultry fanciers--this tablet placed by the/Rhode Island Red Club of America/with contributions of Rhode Island Red/breeders throughout the world/on land donated by/Deborah Manchester/1925."

Significance

The Rhode Island Red (1925) is significant because it is the single best and best-known depiction of Rhode Island's state animal. More than many states' animals, the Rhode Island Red symbolizes the nation's smallest state--in its size and in its disposition. The monument also testifies to an aspect of the state's history, its late nineteenth- and early twentieth-century poultry industry.

The Rhode Island Red originated as a breed here in Little Compton, at William Tripp's farm on Long Highway, and became an economically important component of the local poultry industry's production, and of the national and international poultry market as well. The breed was raised both for meat and eggs. It is no longer as important commercially and has been replaced by more specialized breeds; the American Livestock Breeds Conservancy has included the Red on its "WATCH" list, as a breed which could be lost if not monitored and supported. Rhode Island's poultry industry is now only a minor component of the state's agriculture.

The sculpture has wide appeal and is one of the best known in the state, perhaps because its homespun subject is portrayed in a medium ordinarily reserved for more solemn subjects. In any case, this chicken has real dignity as well as charm.

The sculptor, Henry L. Norton, was from Winthrop, Massachusetts. The sculpture was commissioned by the Rhode Island Red Club, with contributions from Red breeders throughout the world.

While the Rhode Island Red is primarily commemorative in intent, its role as the principal historic portrayal of the state's mascot has invested it with its own historic significance.
