A black and white photograph of the entrance to a Federal Office Building. The building is constructed of large, rectangular stone blocks. Above the entrance, there is a decorative frieze featuring three panels: the left and right panels show architectural details, and the central panel features the Great Seal of the United States. The words "FEDERAL OFFICE BUILDING" are carved in large, bold, sans-serif letters above the doorway. The entrance itself is a dark, recessed space with a door on the left side. Two ornate, lantern-style light fixtures are mounted on the wall on either side of the entrance. A set of concrete steps leads up to the entrance, with metal handrails on both sides. The overall style is classical and monumental.
