III. Physical description of property and historic significance

Longview has a central hall plan, two rooms deep. Changes include the construction of a small rear wing, the addition of a rear carport, the loss of one of the chimneys, the loss of both mantels, the installation of false galleries, and the addition of a small side window. Despite these admittedly significant alterations, Longview's style and architectural identity are still easily discernible. Moreover, Longview represents an archetype once common but now so rare that even altered examples are still important in the heritage of the area.

Boundary Justification:

The total acreage under single ownership consists of a large amount of land. To include all of it would have meant listing considerable unrelated acreage. One acre was considered sufficient to take in the house and its immediate setting. Boundaries cut more closely at the rear because the rear of the house has been considerably altered and hence there is no historic vista to protect.
