Christian & Annie Holst House, Brigham City, Box Elder County, UT

Narrative Description

The Christian and Annie Holst house, built c. 1878 with a 1915 addition, is a later settlement-era dwelling and one of only four in Brigham City that retains the original wooden drop siding. It is located at the southeast corner of 200 East and 500 South streets and stands out prominently as one of five houses in the block built before 1900. The other pre-1900 homes were remodeled and have lost much of their architectural integrity. Located on a small lot that is surrounded by lawn and lined with trees on the north property line, the home faces west on Second East Street; there are no outbuildings on the property. This street is wide and tree-lined with light automobile traffic.

The house is a one-and-one-half story frame structure with gabled roof, drop siding and classical details. Cornice returns and pedimented window heads are the Greek Revival features of this simple hall and parlor house. The facade has not been altered and features a four-panel entrance door with transom light and two flanking windows that have one-over-one double-hung wooden sash. Most of the original glass in the windows has not been replaced and is wavy. Atop the asphalt-shingled gabled roof are two corbelled brick end-wall chimneys. The ground floor windows at each side of the house are the same type as on the façade, but narrower. The south elevation has two windows at the first level and two much narrower ones up in the gable end. The north elevation has only one small window in the gable end, but is otherwise similar.

In 1915, James Tingey added a one-and-one-half-story ell at the rear of the c. 1878 house doubling the square footage.¹ The home was enlarged by two bedrooms and two storage rooms on the second floor, a living room and a kitchen on the first level, and a furnace/storage room below ground. The gabled roof of the addition overhangs to form long porches on its north and south sides, and from the east appears somewhat like a gabled Craftsman-style bungalow. The 1915 ell has not diminished the presence of the c. 1878 section. The c. 1878 facade door still appears as the main entrance to the home although the family uses the south door of the addition as the entryway.

The interior of the house retains the historic partitions, doors with transoms, and molding and windowsills. The original c. 1878 staircase is located between the hall and the parlor sections (north and south bays) and is very steep. The house retains its architectural integrity and is a contributing historic resource in Brigham City.

Narrative Statement of Significance

The Christian and Annie Holst House, constructed c. 1878 with a 1915 addition, is significant under Criteria A and C. Under Criterion A it is significant for its association with the settlement phase of Brigham City, Utah, including the organization of the town's government; Christian Holst was the eleventh Mayor of Brigham City. The house is architecturally significant under Criterion C as one of a few Classical-style houses in Brigham City that retains its architectural integrity and one of three that still retains the original drop/novelty siding.² The Christian and Annie Holst House is being nominated under the "Economic Development of Brigham City and Residential Architecture, 1854-1950" context of the Historic Resources of Brigham City multiple property nomination.

History of Brigham City

When the Mormons³ were driven out of Nauvoo, Illinois, as religious refugees, they found a new and more isolated home in the Great Basin area in 1847. Settlement of this arid land took place rapidly. In 1850, William Davis explored the land near the northern part of the Great Salt Lake and called it Box Elder. In March 1851 he returned with his family and a few friends to live. In 1853, Church and territorial leader, Brigham Young asked his friend and Church Apostle Lorenzo Snow to take 50 families with him from the Salt Lake City area and strengthen the settlement at Box Elder. Snow carefully chose settlers who had various trade skills. The city was renamed Brigham City and was platted in 1856.⁴

In 1865, Snow implemented changes to the local economy. He asked merchants to combine their businesses to form the Brigham City Mercantile and Manufacturing Association, or Co-op. Eventually, nearly all townspeople participated in this communitarian economy. Five factories were built which provided the citizens with all their commodities. The Co-op was a huge success and became the prototype for hundreds of other cooperative ventures throughout the Utah Territory.⁵ A series of financial disasters in the late 1870s put an end

Also, "Photographs of Brigham City Homes, 1901," Photographic Collection at L.D.S. Church Archives. This collection of 237 houses shows well over half of the homes in the city. Fifty of these are hall and parlor "classical" adobe houses. Fifteen of these are Classical-style hall and parlor houses with drop/novelty siding.

⁵The United Order, as it was called, was a relatively short-lived concept in which communities would share all things equally. Businesses and industries were established to provide goods and services to help make the community self-sufficient. The idea was that all would be equal without class distinction and its inherent problems.

to this unique economic system. By the early 1880s, the town's way of doing business had returned to private enterprise.⁶

An act of the Utah Territorial Legislature in 1867 approved Brigham City as an incorporated town which was authorized to elect its mayor and city council. Since there were no political parties at the time, a single slate of officers, who were also LDS Church leaders, was selected and presented to the people for their approval. Chester Loveland became the first Mayor. The members of the first city council were: Alvin Nichols, Hans P. Jensen, Adolph Madsen, Justin C. Wixom, and William Box.⁷ The separation of church leadership and government leadership came about 30 years later, when Utah became a state.⁸

During the Co-op time period, occupations were somewhat diverse. Half of the people were farmers, and the other half either worked in local factories or as tradesmen such as carpenters, blacksmiths and shoemakers.⁹ After the Co-op failed, farming was still the major occupation. The 1900 census shows forty-four percent of the workforce listed farming as their primary job. The return to a private economy necessitated some new occupations such as attorneys, insurance agents, druggists and merchants.¹⁰

History of Christian Holst

Christian Holst was one of the earliest merchants and mayors of the city. He was born in Denmark February 16, 1853. When he was three years old, he immigrated with his parents to the United States, settling in Iowa. Three years later, the family came to Utah and lived briefly in nearby Willard, then settled permanently in Brigham City. Christian attended local schools. In c. 1878, he married Annie F. Schow. At this time Christian built their first home at 495 South and 200 East.¹¹ He bought the property from watchmaker Niels Peter Hansen who lived just west across 200 East Street.¹²

Christian was a farmer and teamster for a number of years, but eventually went into merchandising. In 1879, he became a door-to-door salesman, carrying his wares in a basket. By 1882, he had enough money to build a small store on Main Street. Christian's business flourished, primarily because he had a reputation for being honest. Consequently, he was able to build a larger store.¹³

Christian Holst was elected Mayor of Brigham City in 1904, eight years after Utah achieved statehood. He served two terms, or four years. During his first year in office, the administration approved a franchise to build and operate a streetcar system. Also in 1904, the first Peach Day celebration was held with the support of Mayor Holst; it's still a major annual event each September. In addition, the city installed its second electric power plant and increased the number of water mains. Other action during Christian's tenure included: installing a head gate in the canyon to measure streams in Box Elder Creek, forming a corporation of creek water users, approving funds for hanging a fire bell, accepting a certified map of Brigham City Corporation boundaries, and organizing the Box Elder Commercial Club.¹⁴

Christian participated in many volunteer positions in the LDS church, including ward Sunday school superintendent. He stayed active in the mercantile business until his death January 31, 1927.¹⁵ Christian sold the house to James Hyrum Tingey on February 25, 1907.¹⁶ James and his family had been living at 677 South 400 East when they purchased the Holst home.¹⁷

James H. Tingey was born in Bountiful, Utah, July 18, 1868, to Maria Page and Henry Tingey. He was the second boy in a family of eleven children. James also had 23 half brothers and sisters because his father Henry was a polygamist with four wives. When James was ten years old, his family moved to Brigham City where he was raised and attended school. He met Sarah Baird in the winter of 1887. They dated for two years and were married in the Logan Temple in June 1889.¹⁸ Sarah was a native of Brigham City and was born July 6, 1870. She was the daughter of Peter and Jessie McGaldery Baird.¹⁹

For twenty-two years, James Tingey worked for J.M. Jensen, who had a large ranch in Mendon and farms in Elwood and Corrine. James was foreman of the ranch that was about 30 miles north of Brigham City, so this kept him away from his family for extended periods of time. In 1908, he went to Mexico four months to oversee the planting of an orchard. He also made trips to Kansas City and Chicago to sell sheep and cattle.²⁰

When his children were old enough to help him farm, James planted his own orchards and raised other crops for income. He had a farm northwest of Corinne along the banks of the Bear River and an apple orchard north of Bear River City. James shipped many railroad cars of apples each year to buyers. He also raised some livestock – taking pride in his horses.²¹ James and Sarah had a large family and needed more room in the home. In 1915, James built a one-and-one-half-story ell to the east. This created a T shaped footprint for the house and doubled its interior size.²²

In 1922, James became sick with stomach ulcers. Four years later on September 19, 1928, he died of hemorrhages caused from the ulcers.²³ Sarah died four years later on September 29, 1932.²⁴ The house stayed in the Tingey family for fifty-eight more years.

Robert Alonzo Tingey, the sixth child of Sarah and James, was the next owner of the house. He was born February 7, 1900, in Brigham City. He worked hard as a young boy in the orchards with his father and older brothers Melvin and Elmo. At age twenty he met Jennie Williams who was hired by his father to pick apples in their orchard. Five years later they were married, in February 1925, in the Salt Lake Temple.²⁵ Jennie was born in Brigham City October 17, 1903. Her parents were George Roland and Sarah Burbank Williams.

In 1933, Robert and Jennie rented Richard Peters' farm where the family lived for thirteen years. Jobs were scarce during the depression, but in 1935 Robert obtained employment with Mountain Fuel Supply Company in Ogden and worked for them twenty years, retiring in 1955.²⁶

In 1940, the couple purchased the family home and bought out the shares of Naomi, Robert's sister. She was living in the home at the time of purchase. Robert and Jennie raised eight children in this dwelling. Robert's avocation was farming, caring for his fruit trees, and genealogy. He died in 1973 leaving the house to his widow Jennie.²⁷ Her avocations were cooking and gardening. She lived in the home until her death June 17, 1999.²⁸ Six months after Jennie's death the house was sold to Craig and Sabrina Montgomery who are the current occupants. Craig works as an electrician and Sabrina takes care of five daughters.²⁹

Architecture

The Christian and Annie Holst House was built in the southeast part of Brigham City in what was a fringe area of the city at the time and only had two or three homes per block. The rest was planted into fruit orchards. One of the largest commercial growers had hundreds of acres of fruit trees planted nearby.³⁰ This area started to fill in the 1940s. Many homes in this part of town were built during the Second World War to accommodate medical personnel and families of wounded soldiers who were treated at the Bushnell Army Hospital.

The most common house type in Brigham City and in Utah during the settlement era (roughly 1847 to 1880) was the hall and parlor, which consisted of a rectangular room, the hall, and a smaller square room, the parlor. The hall generally served as the front room and kitchen area, and the parlor was used as the master bedroom. These homes were generally associated with classical styles as well as with the Gothic Revival and Victorian styles. Adobe was the most common building material for this type of house, and the height of the house could be one, one-and-a-half, or two stories.³¹ The later addition of a rear cross wing, whether in a T or L plan was a common way to add square footage to what were considerably tight spaces.

The Christian Holst house was initially built as a one-and-a-half story hall-parlor frame house with drop siding. The classical details of the house place it into the most common style of houses in Brigham City for this time period, but the drop siding set it apart as uncommon as stone and adobe brick were the most common early building materials.³² It very much retains its architectural integrity and historical feeling and presence in the community and is a contributing historic resource in Brigham City.
