DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Buresh Farm consists of five structures (house and agricultural buildings) on 12 acres of land on the north shore of Lake McBride. The land is rolling, with patches of timber scattered about. All the structures, except the hog house, are thought to have been built around 1894, and all are of frame construction on limestone foundations.

The farmhouse is two stories, 36' x 23', with a gable roof and wide eaves. A root cellar beneath the house features an arched ceiling of brick. The facades are symmetrical, with a center door. Windows, in plain moldings, are 2/2 sash. To the rear is a one-story gable-roof wing. The wooden porch, which extends across the front of the house, replaced a much smaller porch sheltering the door. The present, hip-roof, porch, is supported by four shaped wood posts. A brick chimney is centrally located on the main roof ridge. Alterations, besides the porch, are minimal: removal of shutters, installation of a plate glass window to the right of the front door, and a small modern garage.

(first used as summer kitchen)

The barn, granary and wash house are of board-and-batten construction. The barn, 52' x 42½', has a wide gable roof sloping to a shed roof on the north side, covered with tin. The interior is constructed with hewn beams held together with wooden pins. Horse stalls are located on the north side, a cattle shed on the south, with a wooden hay floor between. The hay mow covers both animal sections, and is open in the middle. A decorative feature is the square wood cupola, with four small gables and louvred openings.

The granary, just north of the barn, has a saltbox roof covered with wooden shingles. The roof extension covers a machine storate area open on east and west ends. Dimensions are 30' x 20'. It is divided into two levels: the lower for oat storage, the upper with individual wooden grain bins for wheat and rye.

The little (8' x 12') wash house, beside the farmhouse on the east side, has a wood-shingled gable roof and a brick chimney on the east end. A door of narrow, vertical boards is located on the north wall, and there are small square windows on east and west sides. The wash house was originally painted white, now redone in red with white battens.

The hog house, although its construction date is unknown, appears from its nonconforming shape to be later than the other farm buildings. It is 75 feet long, 35 feet wide, on a concrete block foundation, of clapboard construction, with a wide gambrel roof. The sides, 11 bays long, feature small, 6/6-light windows. Each end has a wide entrance into an equally wide "hall" running the length of the structure. A small brick chimney is located at the southeast corner of the roof, which was recovered three years ago with composition shingle.

None of these agricultural buildings have undergone alteration, other than recent repainting

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Buresh Farm is a well-preserved example of a late 19th-century agricultural operation in Iowa. The farm buildings reflect the variety of activities which typified premechanized farming: cattle and hogs for home and market, horses for plowing and hauling, and several crops (oats, wheat, rye and corn). While not unique, this farm is of the sort which is steadily disappearing from the state as changing agricultural techniques render structures like those of the Buresh farm obsolete.

A number of Czech (or "Bohemian") names are associated with the property, among them that of Buresh. From at least 1889 until 1917, the farm was owned by members of the Buresh family (the first, Joseph Sr., is thought to have come to the U.S. and Johnson County in 1869). Also associated with the farm are Burianek and Kremenak family members, through intermarriage.
