The Lexington and Main Historic District is in the town of Wilmore (population of 4215 in 1990) which is located in the southern part of Jessamine County in the Inner Bluegrass region of Kentucky. Wilmore is approximately 4 miles south of the county seat at Nicholasville and 4 miles north of the Kentucky River at High Bridge. The district is composed of 5 properties, primarily residential buildings built between 1900 and 1940. All of these properties contribute to the character of the district. The Lexington and Main Historic District is roughly rectangular in shape and contains parts of two city blocks or on the east and west sides of Lexington Avenue and the north side of East Main at the intersection of Lexington Avenue and Main.

The individual structures within the district are described in detail in the District Inventory. The paragraphs which follow summarize the general characteristics of the district.

Section 8: Significance of the Lexington and Main Historic District

The Lexington and Main Historic District is significant under criterion A for its association with a series of events which created its present form. The district contributes to our understanding of the historic forces within the context "The Development of Railroad Towns in Kentucky, 1870 to 1940". The Lexington and Main Historic District retains a high degree of integrity relative to the aspects of setting, materials, and association.

Railroad Towns in Kentucky: 1870-1940

In the late nineteenth century, the major forces for railroad construction in Kentucky were the Louisville and Nashville (L&N) Railroad and Cincinnati Southern Railroad. Chartered by the Kentucky Legislature in 1850, the L&N Railroad was completed to the Kentucky-Tennessee line by 1859 and had twenty-four stations along the way. The Cincinnati Southern Railroad was authorized by Ohio law in 1869 to build a railroad through central Kentucky to Chattanooga. The Tennessee legislature approved the project in 1870, but bitter battles in the Kentucky legislature in 1870-71 kept Kentucky from approving the railroad line until February 1872.

Of the stations on the L&N Railroad line, five were located in existing county seats including Shepherdsville (Bullitt County), Elizabethtown (Hardin County), Bowling Green (Warren County), Munfordville (Hart County), and Franklin (Simpson County). Eight of the railroad stations were placed in communities which were already established, but were not county seats. For the remaining communities including Lebanon Junction, Bardstown Junction, Glendale, Sonora, Upton, Rowletts, Horse Cave, Smiths Grove, Oakland, Rich Pond, and Woodburn, the railroad provided the initial impetus for development.

Construction of the Cincinnati Southern through central Kentucky began in December 1873. Rough terrain south of Danville slowed progress and the entire route to Chattanooga did not open until early 1880. The Cincinnati Southern main line passed through 29 stations including seven county seats, five stage coach stops, and five crossroads communities. The remainder of the stations, including Sadieville and Wilmore, were new towns.

The forms of the towns which developed in response to railroad access, such as Wilmore, were different from other Kentucky town forms. To understand how the mid- to late-nineteenth century towns which developed in response to the railroad were configured, and what their characteristics were, the Sanborn Fire Insurance Maps for Wilmore (1919, 1929) were compared to two other rural railroad towns: Sadieville (1895, 1901, 1908, 1929) in Scott County chartered in 1876 on the Cincinnati Southern Railroad and Lebanon Junction (1933) in Bullitt County chartered in 1859 on the Louisville and Nashville Railroad.

The new railroad towns began as Wilmore did, a flag stop at a point where the railroad crossed an existing well-travelled rural turnpike. In Wilmore, it was the Glass Mill Pike, a road which linked southern Jessamine County to Glass Mill which was located on Jessamine Creek approximately one mile east of the present town of Wilmore. In Sadieville, it was the Big Eagle Pike, a turnpike which followed the course of Big Eagle Creek in the northeast part of Scott County. In central Kentucky, farmers were early supporters of railroads because the terrible condition of the turnpikes after the Civil War made it difficult to transport their products to markets. The flag stops were utilized by farmers as shipping points for local produce, grain, and livestock.

As the flag stops developed into towns and lots for commercial and residential use were platted, the main street was laid out either parallel to the railroad tracks as in Sadieville or perpendicular to the tracks as in Wilmore and Lebanon Junction. The center of commercial activity for the town was indicated by two-story brick or frame buildings which were concentrated in a area usually one block deep on either side of the side of the tracks. The depots and commercial development were usually on the same side of the tracks. In none of the communities examined do the commercial districts appear on both sides of the railroad tracks.

The development of the flag stops into communities coincided with the emergence of general stores, a commercial entity which became more prevalent after the Civil War. With the division of large land holdings into smaller farms, commodities were needed in smaller quantities by individual farm families. Middlemen employed by the wholesale concerns located in the larger cities like Louisville travelled by trains to the towns in the rural areas. Each station and town represented an opportunity to establish an outlet for manufactured goods. In the railroad towns, the general stores were usually located near the railroad passenger and freight stations to be accessible to customers, shipping facilities, salesmen, and train travellers. The general store carried clothes, shoes, thread, tools, and food products. In Sadieville, Lebanon Junction, and Wilmore, the commercial buildings closest to the tracks were general stores.

The paragraphs which follow describe the physical characteristics of the railroad towns of Sadieville, Lebanon Junction, and Wilmore relative to the layout of commercial districts, residential development, and changes over time. In these towns the physical relationship of the commercial, residential, and industrial buildings to the railroad tracks and to each other communicates information about the history and function of these communities which is not usually covered in written histories.

In Sadieville, the 1895 map indicates a population of 500 and shows Main Street oriented north-south with commercial buildings on the east side of the street and the railroad parallel to it on the west. West of the tracks were industrial structures, but no additional commercial buildings. In the commercial district, there are three, two-story brick buildings housing general merchandise stores and three other frame buildings which contain a drugstore, hardware store, general store, and a post office. In Sadieville, the commercial buildings are free-standing and do not share common walls. Frame dwellings were located between the commercial buildings in 1895.

Consistent with Sadieville's use as an agricultural shipping point, there are three frame tobacco warehouses. One is south of the commercial area and adjacent to the railroad tracks and two others are located within a three block of radius of the tracks. In 1895, the Sadieville Milling Co. was shown on the south end of the commercial area adjacent to the railroad. On the 1901 map of Sadieville, which still indicates a population of 500, additional frame dwellings have been added on the north end of main street and a sawmill/ planing mill has been built on Big Eagle Pike east of the railroad. By the turn of the century, all of the residential structures are mostly T-plans of frame construction. Most of the new residential construction occurred on the extension of Main Street and along the crossroad, Eagle Creek Pike. By 1908, the population of Sadieville reached 600 and the new buildings include the Neale Hotel adjacent to the railroad tracks, a creamery, two banks, fire engine house, a carriage shop and livery stable. In 1908, the dwellings in the commercial district have been replaced by commercial buildings. By 1929, Sadieville's population had decreased to 400, and the Sadieville Municipal Light Plant built.

National Park ServiceNational Register of Historic Places
Continuation SheetLexington and Main Historic District

In the 1933 map of Lebanon Junction, the one- and two-story, brick commercial buildings are on both sides of the west end of Main Street which is perpendicular to the north-south orientation of the railroad tracks. The commercial buildings are not free standing as the ones were in late-nineteenth century Sadieville, but are concentrated in blocks with common walls, a configuration similar to the one found in Wilmore. Adjacent to the tracks are warehouses and industrial enterprises related to the railroad including a lumber yard, grist mill, stock yards, ice and light company. There are residences on both the east and west ends of Main Street on both sides of the track, but the commercial buildings are only on the west side. All of the residential structures are of frame construction.

When the Cincinnati Southern Railroad secured right-of-way through Jessamine County in 1876, John D. Scott had extensive land holdings in the vicinity of what is now Wilmore. Scott lived in a house called "Belaire" which was located near the present site of Glide Crawford Hall on the campus of Asbury College. The railroad built its depot in 1882 to serve as a shipping point for the area and christened it Scott's Station. Despite Scott's attempts to persuade the railroad to fence its right-of-way, the company refused and several of Scott's prized jennets were killed by work trains. When Scott sued the railroad for damages, the company officials retaliated by changing the depot's name to Wilmore in honor of J.R. Wilmore, another owner of large tracts of land in the vicinity.

As was true for the other communities along the route, the Cincinnati Southern Railroad was Wilmore's link to the outside world. Adjacent to the tracks were stock yards and warehouses to accommodate the local farmers who shipped produce, grain, and livestock including horses, hogs, lambs, and cattle to Cincinnati or as far away as Nova Scotia. Glass Milling Company moved its operations from Jessamine Creek to the vicinity of the railroad circa 1907 to have better access for the distribution of its products. Powered by steam since 1887, the mill did not have to remain in the vicinity of the stream and wanted to save on the hauling costs from the former site one mile east of Wilmore to railroad. A spur was built from the railroad to the mill so that products could be directly loaded into cars (Jessamine Journal, June 7, 1907, p. 2).

Newspaper accounts in the 1880's reported that merchants such as R.J. Scott and W.C. Prather, and R.A. Dodd (the local express agent) had traveled to Cincinnati to buy Christmas goods for stores. Businessmen such as R.J. Curd travelled via the train to Florida on business trips for Glass Milling. Ministers, professors, evangelists, and Asbury students are often mentioned in transit via the railroad. Railroad brought visitors to Wilmore for revivals and to the Holiness Camp Grounds. To accommodate the travellers, the Sallee Hotel was built on Main Street, west of the concentration of commercial buildings. In the deed research, however, there were references to an earlier hotel which stood between the railroad and the present city hall building.

By 1896, Wilmore had two doctors, H.S. Crockett and H.L. McLean and one druggist O.C. Garvey. Edward S. Scott, son of John D. Scott, still continued to run the general merchandise store he had started in 1878 with J.A. Fisher. Another general merchandise store was run by the Curd brothers. The R.L. Joplin Company sold clothing and general merchandise from the Mercantile Building located on the south side of main west of the railroad tracks. Nunnally and T.S. Barr had a business which dealt in furniture, hardware, saddlery, and farming implements. They were also undertakers. Other businesses included a hotel, broom factory, cigar factory, three blacksmith shops, two livery stables, two milliners, two architects, two butcher shops, brick manufacturer, a green grocery, and another small store offering groceries and queensware.

In 1911, a fire in the business district destroyed most of the commercial buildings. After incorporation in 1918, the city bought a lot from the presbyterian church to build a structure which housed city hall, firehouse, and jail.

In Wilmore, as in Sadieville and Lebanon Junction, most of the dwellings are of frame construction except for the brick dwellings built on Kenyon Avenue and near the intersection of Main and N. Lexington. Unlike Sadieville, Wilmore did not experience a decline in population in the late 1920s and continued to grow from a population of 1500 in 1919 to 1800 in 1929, possibly due to the presence of Asbury College established in 1890 and Asbury Theological Seminary established in 1923. Evidence of this growth can be seen in the prevalence of bungalows and four square dwellings in the North Lexington Avenue District, Kenyon Avenue District, and in the vicinity of the intersection of Lexington Avenue and Main Street.
