DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Plymouth Congregational Church is situated on a spacious tract of land in Coconut Grove, Florida. The building patterned after a Spanish Mission Church in Mexico, was designed by Clinton Mackenzie of New York. A Spanish stonemason, Phillippe Felix Rebom, was commissioned to set the stones. Each of the hand-hewn native limestone blocks was placed by hand during the 18-month period of construction. The one-story stone structure has three doors and two bell towers in the main facade. The main entry is a massive, 300-year old, hand-carved door composed of walnut, backed with Spanish oak, and contains the original hand-wrought iron fittings. The central door is of immense proportions, is semi-circular, and ornamented with stone pilasters supporting an entablature. A niche above this door has a broken pediment above. The central door is flanked by smaller entrance doors leading to side loggias. These side loggias enclose the interior and extend the length of the church in a south to north direction. Evenly spaced posts support the eaves which extend from the gabled roof. The roof covering consists of red Spanish and French tiles. The main facade is perfectly balanced in appearance, and this symmetry is continued in the pair of bell towers which extend upward from the roof line. The bell towers are capped with stone finials, and are notable features of the exterior. A scalloped parapet between the bell towers is also topped with decorative finials. The lower portion of the main facade containing the side doors are joined to the upper portion by large scrolls. The majority of the main facade is heavily covered by dense vine growth. Overall plan of the Church is cruciform, with aisled nave and includes wing extensions at the rear (north) portion of the building. Window treatment consists of diamond-shaped panes in french doors, with semi-circular arched transoms above. There are no windows in the main facade. The exterior and interior walls are formed from irregular hand-cut block of native coral.

The entire complex includes several buildings in addition to the core building; among them are: the sanctuary, the fellowship hall, an office building, a school, and the walled gardens. The sanctuary and gardens are the oldest portions in the complex. The garden on the east side of the sanctuary is walled on three sides, and enclosed on the fourth by the church. Loggias around the walls present the effect of a cloistered courtyard. In the north end of this courtyard there is an open pulpit built of the same coral rock. The west side of the courtyard is not enclosed and iscopen to the other buildings.

The sanctuary was enlarged in 1953, with additional expansion in 1958. Architect Robert Law Weed designed the additions in a style compatible to the original structure. EE INSTRUCTIONS

The Plymouth Congregational Church plays a major role in the settlement of Coconut Grove, Florida. The growth of this 19th century bay community traces from the earliest settlers in the area who organized the Union Chapel which was the forerunner of Union Congregational Church, founded in 1897. James Bolton, the first pastor, offered incorporation of his congregation into whatever denomination would provide financial assistance, and when the Church of the Pilgrims accepted, the church was renamed Plymouth Congregational Church. The church facility was constructed over an 18-month period, from 1916-1917. However, the history of the congregation and the first chapel began with the establishment of a one-room Sunday School building, erected in 1887.

Earliest known Church records of the Union Congregational Church are dated March 2, 1901. During the first three years of existence, a small chapel was erected on land donated by Commodore Ralph M. Munroe. The names of Coconut Grove's first settlers appear among the list of founders of the congregation, and it is from this standpoint that the Plymouth Congregational Church derives its primary significance. The first Congregationalist minister was Solomon G. Merrick, who became pastor in May, 1901.

Significance of this property relates not only to its direct association with the pioneers of Coconut Grove in the late 19th century, but also to its architectural design. As an outstanding example of Spanish Mission style, it has been recognized by leading architects as one of the finest specimens of Spanish design in the South, as well as being one of the most historic churches in Dade County, Florida.

The Church building represents the history and development of one of South Florida's earliest settlements.
