PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

This two-and-a-half-story wood frame structure is fairly symmetrical in plan and massing. With the exception of two window bays, the plan would be rectangular, with the long axis oriented perpendicular to the street. The window bays terminate in short gables which intersect with a single large gabled form running the length of the house. On the front of the building the gable features a Palladian window and a curved overhang between the bottom of the eaves. Clapboard is used as the primary exterior material in the lower areas. Classical detailing, which is small, occurs most prominently in the porch.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE John J. Hawkins was a prominent attorney and judge during the last three decades of Arizona's territorial period. Among his many noteworthy positions were a seat on the Supreme Court of Arizona, membership in the Council of the Territorial Legislature, and President of the Arizona Bar Association. His home on South Mt. Vernon is an interesting variation of the Queen Anne style. Although the building lacks the variation in roof planes associated with that style, it captures the articulation of vertical surfaces very well. Probably as a result of influence from the Shingle Style, the structural aspects of the building are played down and the envelope is accentuated. The transition from the gable to the roof illustrates this feature most clearly. Other features de-
