DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (II known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The district is an early settlement of Rhode Island and in 1970 contains at least 76 buildings possessing architectural and/or historical value. About 10 of these buildings are of XVIII or earliest XIX Century date, while the remainder belong to the early and middle XIX Century. The village has in the last sixty years lost many of its older buildings, but those still existing and included in the above count are close to their original appearance, well maintained and in general requiring only a moderate amount of restoration. All of the historic buildings in the district are of wood frame construction except the stone mill—the last remaining of several which once depended upon the Chepachet River running through the village and upon the mill pond and waterfall, which still do exist.

Some of the buildings of historical note and architectural interest in the district are two fine frame churches, one built in 1821 and the other in 1846; a stone mill dating from 1814; the Masonic Hall, in continuous use for its original purpose since 1802; the stage-coach tavern, built c. 1800, which was military headquarters for the Dorr Rebellion; the Brown and Hopkins grocery store, built in 1799, in business under the same roof since 1806—thought to be a record in this country; and numerous handsome, well-maintained old dwellings exhibiting a sequence of architectural styles over a full century.

8. Significance.

From this election there emerged the incumbent governor, Samuel W. King, and anti-governor Dorr, whom King proclaimed a traitorous criminal-calling out the state militia. There were a number of clashes, the most notable taking place in Chepachet, a Dorr stronghold, where Acote Hill had been encamped and fortified. When three regiments of militia advanced on Chepachet there was only desultory scuffling, for Dorr and his supporters had prudently left, avoiding another Concord or Lexington. (Dorr later gave himself up, was tried and vindictively given a life sentence, but in 1845 was released; and in time the reforms which he had promoted were, in fact, incorporated into the frame of the state's government.) Acote Hill is still prominent as one approaches the village from the southeast on U. S. Route 44 and is now a cemetery.
