Narrative Description

(Describe the historic and current physical appearance of the property. Explain contributing and noncontributing resources if necessary. Begin with a summary paragraph that briefly describes the general characteristics of the property, such as its location, setting, size, and significant features.)

Summary Paragraph

Marshall, with an approximate population of 3800, is situated west of the Wabash River and Indiana State line; it is also about 200 miles directly south of Chicago. Meeting at the eastern boundary of the Marshall Business Historic District are Illinois Route 1 and the historic Old US 40. Old US 40, designated as a National Scenic Byway, is formerly known as the Cumberland Road and the National Road. From this intersection, heading west on Old US 40, now named Archer Avenue, three blocks of continuous two- and three-story commercial buildings line both sides of the street. At the intersection of Archer Avenue and 6th Street begins the courthouse square that is also surrounded by one- and two-story commercial buildings. However, the buildings form small continuous sections with a park and parking lots in between as well as infill of modern development. Of the 56 resources in the district, 46 are considered contributing (with two being individually listed). The district has a strong continuity largely due to the concentration of Italianate commercial style buildings with bracketed cornices and second story decorative window hoods. The ground level facades are primarily intact with a few alterations that reflect changes in style. The district has two examples of mid-century design; each are simply stated, but still show elements reflective of the style. The bandstand on the courthouse square is a contributing structure. The buildings considered as non-contributing are those that do not meet the 1963 threshold and/or lack architectural integrity needed to convey the ambiance of the period of significance.

Narrative Description

The Marshall Business Historic District is an interesting study of mid 19th to mid 20th century architecture. Anchored by the Archer House (1841, individually listed), which is the oldest building in the district, the main portion of the district retains its sense of integrity, location and space as well as its overall massing of two- and three-story buildings. The concentration and density of the buildings adds to this. All buildings are in good condition and are primarily brick construction with ground level storefronts. Some storefronts have exposed cast iron pilasters with manufacturer insignia with a few manufactured by George L. Mesker. However, most were constructed in Terre Haute, IN, which is directly across state lines from Marshall and was a larger metropolis to attain materials from. The prominent architectural style is Italianate and the majority of buildings retain their bracketed cornices and hooded second story windows. Also the majority of ground level entrances retain their original design of recessed entrance door, large display windows and transoms. Those entrances that have been altered are still within their original openings that could easily be restored. A slight jog in the district off Archer Ave includes a Moderne Post Office. The one-story brick building encompasses the streamlined style of the era; the interior still boasts original vestibule doors and painted mural. Within the district are two examples of mid-century design as well as a couple of remodeled mid-century facades; all give a nice juxtaposition and showcase style trends within the United States during the period of significance.

The courthouse square is more open and has lost some of its original density due to fire, demolition, and the construction of modern buildings. However, the 19th century buildings remaining, including Harlan Hall (1872, individually listed), retain a good degree of their original architectural integrity. The county courthouse is the prominent building of the district, situated near the western district boundary. Constructed of brick and of an Italian Renaissance Revival design, it retains much of its original integrity from the entrances, the clock tower and cupola. On the courthouse grounds is the 1929 bandstand; constructed of wood and stone, it has been utilized by the city band and is the focus of many downtown activities.

Following are detailed descriptions of each building in the district. The descriptions begin with Archer Avenue buildings form east to west, followed by N. 7th Street, then continuing along around the courthouse square. It is noted if the building is contributing or non-contributing and corresponds to the accompanying maps.

1. Address: 717 Archer Ave

Status: Individually Listed

The Archer House

Current Function: WORK IN PROGRESS

Historic Name: Archer House/National Dixie Hotel/St. James Hotel

Construction Date: 1841

Description:

Situated on the corner of Route 1 and Archer Avenue with façades facing north (N) and east (E), it is a two-story brick building with side gable roof and small ell. The main, N facing façade has six bays. The second story has six, six/one replacement sash windows with straight stone headers and sills. The first story has four, six/one replacement sash windows and one large plate glass window; two sash windows have straight stone headers and sills, while the other two have an iron header and stone sill. The large plate glass window has an iron header and stone sill. The first story windows flank an off center entrance marked by a flat roof portico with column supports. The entrance has double doors of single glass panes with sidelights.

The E facing façade has seven bays and extends back following the angle of the road; where the E and S facing façades meet creates almost a sharp point. Two six/one replacement sash windows are in gable; second story has seven six/one replacement sash windows. First story has three six/one replacement sash windows with three windows bricked in; centered side entrance door and stair are present. A modern addition with two sets of sliding glass doors is at back of E façade.

History:

From its construction as a stagecoach stop by Marshall's founder Col. William B. Archer in 1841, the structure has served as a hotel until 2007. It has had many names in the past from St. James Hotel and the National Dixie Hotel to its present name, the Archer House. Important historical figures have visited and/or stayed at the hotel such as Abraham Lincoln and Grover Cleveland. Individually listed in the National Register of Historic Places in 1976, it was also listed in the 2010 Illinois Landmarks Most Endangered List and was subsequently purchased. It is now being restored.

The Marshall Family Restaurant
Current Function: COMMERCE: restaurant
Historic Name: Tom's Restaurant
Construction Date: c. 1890

Description:

Two-story brick building with parapet with cornice covered in vertical siding. Second story has three segmental arched windows with hood, keystone and stone sill. Windows appear to be one/one wood sash, however upper sash is covered in clapboard siding leaving bottom sash exposed. Storefront is framed in metal siding with a siding covered shed roof awning; the far right section of awning projects out over entrance door. Storefront has large plate glass windows to left of entrance door; windows are metal framed and have colored panels for bulkhead and transom. Entrance is a glass commercial door.

History:

Originally, the properties at 703, 705 and 707 Archer Avenue were occupied by separate businesses. This building was originally a garage up till the 1920s. By the 1940s, it became Blundell's Restaurant and has remained a restaurant under different names, including Tom's Café and its present name, the Marshall Family Restaurant. The restaurant also includes the adjacent buildings at 703 and 705. In 1968, a car crashed into the building prompting a remodel of the storefront.

The Marshall Family Restaurant
Current Function: COMMERCE: restaurant
Historic Name: Tom's Restaurant
Construction Date: c. 1890

Description:

Situated on a corner lot with north (N) and west facing facades, is a two-story brick building. The front (N) façade has a false front of metal siding covering the second story and extends down, covering the location of transoms. Horizontal metal siding divides the storefront into two bays. The left bay has three large plate glass windows framed in metal with colored panels above and in bulkhead. The right bay has a left commercial entrance door with sidelights; two large plate glass windows are at right and are framed in metal. Colored panels are above and in bulkhead. A siding covered shed roof awning spans three-fourths of the left bay. The west façade has six bricked in second story windows.

History:

The 705 storefront began as a grocery with subsequent years being occupied by dry goods and retail sales. Around the 1940s, it was Ernie's Delight Bar. The 703 storefront's early history includes a saloon and Brandenstein's leather goods; the leather goods broadened into buggies and eventually automobile sales. Eventually the owner of Tom's Café (the 707 storefront) purchased the 705 and 703 storefronts; all three were part of his restaurant by the 1960s. In 1968, a car crashed into the 707 storefront and prompted the façade remodel of all three storefronts; this remodel remains intact today. It has remained a restaurant and is now known as the Marshall Family Restaurant.

entrance door to upper-story.

The west façade has thirteen, second story windows. All match front façade second story windows. The portion of the west façade storefront consists of one large plate glass window with brick infill and bulkhead. The first story has four individual entrances to additional business spaces; large plate glass windows are adjacent to three entrances. At center, a modern commercial entrance is present with door at left and large plate glass windows, right. At rear of building, entrance has an adjacent two/one segmental arch wood sash window; upper sash panes have been painted white.

History:

Originally constructed in 1888 as the Wright House Hotel, it was an active hotel until 1897. After this, the building had different businesses occupying the two storefronts. At the back of 702, a tin smith was located there as well as a printing business and a repair shop. In 1912, the 702 storefront was occupied by a bank. Between the years of 1937-1971, it was an insurance agency owned by Harry R Bamesbarger, which was then purchased by Richard Ewbank. The 704 storefront was primarily retail businesses, housing grocers, a jewelry store and smaller boutique style shops. Ewbank expanded his business in 2006 and incorporated both addresses for his storefront.

Historic Name: Crossroads Building
Construction Date: 1958

Description:

Situated on a corner lot with facades facing north and east, is a two-story brown brick building with side gable roof. A vertically angled brick partition wall extends out and away from the front (N) façade, separating the façade in two. Front (N) façade second story windows consist of window groupings; each grouping has large stationary pane of glass in upper two-thirds and an awning window in bottom one-third. Groupings are on either side of angled brick partition and in second story of east facing façade. At ground level, right side of angled partition, is window grouping similar to second story, however smaller in scale with awning windows; a built-in planters box is under this set of windows. Left side of brick partition, a commercial entrance door and a grouping of three windows, similar to scale of second story, but all stationary. The east façade gable has four elongated windows that extend in height with pitch of roof; gable is covered in vertical vinyl siding. The second story has window groupings symmetrically placed; from left to right – group of two casements, two sets of transoms, and one group of three identical to front façade. The east façade's ground level has four bays of two window groupings extended out approximately at a 30-degree angle with contemporary entrance doors tucked in where angle terminates.

History:

In the early 1950s, a fire destroyed the original 19th century buildings that occupied this lot. By 1958, the existing building was constructed by Dr. Earl Mitchell. At that time, the Townhouse Restaurant occupied the lower level. An insurance business now shares the building with the local radio station, WMMC 105.9.

Below scroll motif is a band of raised/recessed brick to create checkered pattern. Two brick columns flank each edge of building's upper story. Second story has three replacement windows with rounded brick hoods that spring from brick piers set in-between each window. Replacement windows have rounded glass transom that fits into original opening. Stone stringcourse spans façade incorporating windowsills. An iron lintel and cast iron pilasters frame storefront. Entry door is centered and contemporary in style. Adjacent door at left matches and serves as entrance to upper story. Large plate glass windows flank entrance door with brick bulkhead. A shake shed roof extends across façade above storefront.

History:

In its early history, the building was a saloon and bowling alley, barber, and warehouse. By mid-century, it was retail businesses and in the 1970s, it was Hilda's Gift Shop. Presently it is a retail specialty shop.

Marshall Mutual Shore Murphy

Current Function: COMMERCE: business

Historic Name: Marshall Mutual Insurance

Construction Date: c.1880 building/1955 façade and remodel

Description:

Situated on corner lot with facades facing south (S) and west, it is a one-story mid-century brick building with flat parapet. The front (S) facade has large plate glass windows flanking a centered commercial door entrance; the windows span from above door to ground. Black architectural glass panels surround entrance. A curved black canvas awning with "insurance" in white lettering covers entrance door.

The west façade has three slightly recessed one/one replacement sash windows; above and below windows are black architectural glass panels similar to front entrance. A fourth window has been bricked in with one a black architectural glass panel present at roofline. Existing windows have a black arched canvas awning with "MM" in white lettering. Directly below roofline near corner where south meets west façade, black lettering spells out in stacked fragments "Insurance, Marshall Mutual, Shore Murphy". Where west façade meets south façade, black lettering spells out "Marshall Mutual Building." The rear of the building has a drive up window.

History:

Two buildings once occupied the two addresses, a three-story building on the corner and an adjacent two-story. The two early buildings were grocers and a bank. The Dulaney Bank that occupied the two-story building, acquired the corner building and remodeled in the 1950s. They removed the upper stories of the two buildings and gave the ground level its new mid-century façade. The bank moved to their present address (415 Archer Ave) in 1976. Marshall Mutual Insurance then moved into the space and remains today.

An iron lintel and cast iron pilasters frame storefront with small column dividing the storefront into two bays. Left bay has angled, recessed commercial entrance and large plate glass window. Right bay has two large plate glass windows. Transoms are covered in plywood and bulkheads are brick.

The front façade wraps around to south façade and terminates after first bay. The S façade upper half-story has rounded arch window matching the west façade. Second story has a six/four replacement sash window with infill at top; window has rusticated header and sill. Iron lintel and cast iron pilaster are below. A large plate glass window fills the bay. Beyond the south façade's first bay, the roofline is a stepped parapet that slopes down towards rear of building. Second story has nine windows; all are six/four replacement sash except rear two that are one/one replacement sash. In third bay is second story entrance with ornate iron stairs. Between second and first story are five bricked in windows and three window openings with replacement sashes. At first story is a commercial door entrance with two adjacent large plate glass windows. A few feet beyond that is a contemporary door.

History:

A dry goods store at this location as well as 121 S. 6th St. was in operation until the late 1890s. Similar to 121 S. 6th, the building had various businesses. In the 1940s, it housed the Hazel Ice Cream Parlor and the E & L Confectionary. In later years, it was a tearoom as well as a fabric store. It is now a quilt shop.

Commercial Building

Historic Name: Marshall Herald

Construction Date: c.1870

Description:

Situated on a corner with east (E) and south facing facades, is a two-story brick building with double bracketed, paneled cornice; cornice continues around and spans south façade. Second story, front (E) façade, has three, one/one wood sash windows with segmental arch hoods and keystones; stone stringcourse spans façade and includes sills. Storefront is divided into three bays. Center bay has commercial door entrance with sidelights and transom. Left and right bays have large plate glass windows with brick bulkheads. Each bay has round arch transom with keystone; transom is divided into two glass panes. The entirety of the front façade has its original stone veneer.

South façade's second story has four two/two segmental wood sash windows with segmental arch hoods; adjacent to back window is a simple two/two wood sash window. At first story are three oculus windows with round hoods and keystones. In between oculus windows are two/two sash windows. A door is at back of building.

A rear addition with stepped parapet has three, second story windows and three first story oculus windows. In between oculus windows is a contemporary entrance marked by a pediment roof awning.

History:

Originally a hardware store, it was primarily a plumbing business by 1912. Beginning in the 1920s, the Marshall Herald newspaper occupied the building. They remained in the building until the 1980s. In 2008, Studio E photography moved into the space and remains today. The upper story is presently occupied as living space.

Description:

Two-story brick building with dentil and bracketed cornice. Below cornice are two small centered vents. Second story has six, two/two segmental arched wood sash windows with segmental stone headers and stone sills; windows are grouped in threes with large space between. An iron lintel and cast iron pilasters frame and divide storefront into three bays. Center bay is an angled commercial entrance. Left and right bays are large plate glass windows spanning from transoms to sill footers with each having a center mullion; windows have faux interior muntins. Transoms are covered in black architectural glass panels. East façade has painted sign, "Marrs Furniture" at upper story, and has adjacent parking lot.

History:

Constructed by Cole, the building originally had two storefronts. In the 1890s and early 1900s, the South Side Meat Market occupied 519; in the 1930s, the 521 storefront became J.W. Wood's furniture store where they specialized in furniture and undertaking. Benton Marrs purchased the building in 1940, combining the storefronts, and maintaining the furniture store; it continued as Marrs Furniture under the ownership of Gene and Patty Marrs until the 1960s. In 1996, the Clark County Genealogical Society acquired the building and it remains today.

Historic Name: Harlan Hall

Construction Date: 1872

Description:

Situated on a corner with north (N) and west facing facades, is a two-story brick building with metal hip roof. Front (N) façade has five bays divided by six brick piers. Second story has center hay loft double doors flanked by four, four/four wood sash segmental arch windows with segmental brick header and keystone. Hayloft doors have transom and "Harlan Hall 1872" in black letters above stone lintel. First story has center entrance with contemporary double doors and sidelights. Far left bay has large white painted panel doors; left bay adjacent to entrance has one glass panel door with transom. The two right bays have one large plate glass window divided into three lights with transom and iron lintel. West façade has seven bays divided by eight brick piers. Second story has fourteen, four/four wood sash segmental arch windows. The far left bays in first story have two sets of three large plate glass windows, matching front façade, with iron lintel. The middle bays have two, one/one replacement windows that flank a double single pane window with iron lintel. The far right bays have six, one/one replacement sash windows. Tie-rods with decorative stars span the façade. The east façade also has seven bays. Second story has eight windows matching the front (N) and west facades. First story has one window also matching the front (N) and west facades. An exterior brick elevator shaft is present.

History:

Constructed in 1872 by Howard Harlan, it was designed as an opera house and a livery stable. The opera house was on the second floor and had a twenty-foot deep stage. The first floor had a drive-in livery stable. In 1904, it was purchased by B.F. Johnson and continued to be an entertainment venue. By the 1920s, the space was modified and utilized as retail space; Hercules Paint Store occupied the first floor and the second story was used as storage as well as the home of a hog house manufacturer. After this, Sane Crystals, a laxative, was manufactured in the building. Prior to the 1950s, it housed an International Harvester dealer. In 1954, the building was purchased by the Loyal Order of Moose and remained in their ownership until 1999. The City of Marshall purchased the building and has since been restored. It is now used again for receptions and dances as well as a community-meeting place. In addition, it is the home to the National Road Welcome Center. Listed in the National Register of Historic Places in 2001, it has received additional awards for preservation efforts including the Governor's Hometown Award and the Illinois Landmarks Driehaus Award.

Historic Name: N/A

Construction Date: 1943/1978

Description:

Situated on a corner lot with south, east and north facing facades, is a one-story metal clad building with side gable roof. Two set of large plate glass windows divided into three lights, meet at the south and east façades. The south façade has a centered single commercial door with sidelights. The north façade has large plate glass window adjacent to commercial entrance door. Signage stating "Napa Auto Parts" is in east façade gable. Parking lot is adjacent to north façade. Connected to main building is a one-story building with stepped parapet (1943 construction). Façade has centered single door entrance; at left and right are two single plate glass windows that are widely spaced. Behind false front is a barrel roof.

History:

Originally, the 1943 addition was a stand-alone structure that was constructed as a garage. It was used for a number of businesses, including a tractor dealership. It is now storage for the 1978 addition, the Napa Auto Parts store.

Summary:

The Marshall Business Historic District represents a cohesive group of commercial buildings that reflect the architectural and community development trends during the period of significance of 1841-1963. The majority of the buildings have retained their original appearance, with most having only minor changes to the storefront. In addition, most retain their original function. These two aspects, as well as the density of the buildings along Archer Avenue, represent the continuity of the city's history as a business district between the mid-nineteenth and mid-twentieth centuries. The buildings that are non-contributing, due to inappropriate modifications and loss of integrity, do not significantly detract from the overall visual cohesiveness of the district.

8. Statement of Significance

Applicable National Register Criteria

(Mark "x" in one or more boxes for the criteria qualifying the property for National Register listing.)

- A Property is associated with events that have made a significant contribution to the broad patterns of our history.
- B Property is associated with the lives of persons significant in our past.
- C Property embodies the distinctive characteristics of a type, period, or method of construction or represents the work of a master, or possesses high artistic values, or represents a significant and distinguishable entity whose components lack individual distinction.
- D Property has yielded, or is likely to yield, information important in prehistory or history.

Criteria Considerations

(Mark "x" in all the boxes that apply.)

Property is:

- A Owned by a religious institution or used for religious purposes.
- B removed from its original location.
- C a birthplace or grave.
- D a cemetery.
- E a reconstructed building, object, or structure.
- F a commemorative property.
- G less than 50 years old or achieving significance within the past 50 years.

Period of Significance (justification)

The period of significance begins in 1841, the construction date for the oldest building in the district, and continues to 1963, the current end date for eligibility for the listing in the National Register.

Criteria Considerations (explanation, if necessary)

Statement of Significance Summary Paragraph (Provide a summary paragraph that includes level of significance and applicable criteria.)

The Marshall Business Historic District is eligible for listing in the National Register of Historic Places under Criterion A for Community Planning and Development and Criterion C for Architecture.

Under Criterion A, the district is locally significant due to the development of Marshall, Illinois in conjunction with the westward expansion of the United States through transportation. This development also contributes to our understanding of a successful small community during the mid-19th to mid-20th centuries.

Under Criterion C, the district is significant due to its architectural integrity. The majority of buildings reflect the Italianate style; however, it also has examples of stylistic trends from Romanesque, Commercial, and Moderne. Most storefronts have been modified, with modifications reflective of changing architectural tastes and styles. Overall, the district retains its density and reflects the dominant styles of its period of significance.

The period of significance for both Criterion A and C for the Marshall Business Historic District is 1841 to 1963. The period reflects the community's growth both in development and representative architectural styles beginning with the construction of the oldest building in the district up to the fifty year mark for the National Register of Historic Places.

Narrative Statement of Significance (Provide at least one paragraph for each area of significance.)

Criterion A: Community Planning/Development

Situated on the eastern boundary of Illinois near the Indiana state line and about 200 miles south of Chicago, Marshall is a small community of about 3800 and is the seat of Clark County. Founded and platted on October 3, 1835 by the owners and purchasers of the land, Colonel William B. Archer and Joseph Duncan, the settlement was named after the recently deceased Chief Justice John Marshall. The settlement was one of many platted due to the National Road. Understanding its importance to westward expansion, Archer and Duncan platted Marshall relative to the National Road and not on the axis of the existing north and south road from Chicago.

The National Road, also known as the Cumberland Road or Trail, was surveyed in Clark County, Illinois, during 1828 and traversed the county by 1834. The National Road, the United States' first federal highway, was the vision of George Washington and Thomas Jefferson who believed that a trans-Appalachian land link was needed to unify the early expanding republic. In 1806, Congress authorized construction of a federally funded road beginning in Cumberland, Maryland and terminating at the Ohio River. As territories in the west became states with new settlements, the National Road was extended to reach the Mississippi River. In its full scope, the National Road traversed from Maryland through Pennsylvania, present day West Virginia, Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois. Construction of the road had its periodic stops and starts; however, it eventually made its way to Illinois. A financial panic in 1837 caused funding for the road to cease, thus construction terminated in Vandalia, the state capital of Illinois at the time. However, even with its construction difficulties, the National Road was a main thoroughfare used by westward travelers and also created a connection to the east for the trade of goods.

Strategically located just west of Terre Haute, Indiana and the Wabash River; Marshall was well positioned to welcome travelers. While agriculture was the early economic basis of the settlement, Marshall grew due to the National Road. The first few years of Marshall saw the construction of about 15 to 30 buildings to house the businesses that would serve settlers traveling west. While it was important to have services available for travelers, Archer also understood the need to attract settlers for Marshall. As people and families were traveling through, Archer was known to approach these individuals, convincing them to remain. He was successful, specifically with those who could assist in construction such as carpenters and bricklayers.¹ As early as 1836, a hotel, tailor, and mill were established; by 1838 a doctor and school were in operation, all of which served to solidify a more permanent settlement. When Archer and Duncan platted Marshall, specific lots were reserved along the National Road, indicating their thoughts of where the town's business center would likely develop.² The majority of the lots fronted the National Road and created what would become Marshall's Main Street (now Archer Avenue) and a thriving business district. Due to its services and the steady influx of travelers and settlers, Marshall was beginning to be favored over other established communities in Clark County.

At the time Marshall was founded, the county seat was in Darwin, a few miles southeast of Marshall along the Wabash River. Darwin was a small community, but very established due to the traffic on the river. However, with new settlements and community centers forming along the National Road, the people of Clark County thought Darwin was too remote for the county seat and in 1835 began petitioning for its removal. The petition went to the state legislature during the 1835-1836 session, however an agreement could not be reached as to where the new county seat should be located. In 1836, a petition was started again with the stipulation that a new location was to be chosen by the county's inhabitants. Two towns were selected as ideal locations, Auburn and Marshall. According to the History of Crawford and Clark Counties, the debates that ensued were not over the politics of having such a distinction, but rather about the "...geographical location...and of personal and private interest."³ In the fall of 1837, a majority vote won Marshall the election for county seat, which was officially moved in June 1838.

In reserving specific lots for the future business district, Col. Archer also had the foresight to reserve a location for a possible future courthouse. One particular parcel (block number 26), sat directly south on the National Road and in the middle of town. In 1839, after Marshall was selected as the new county seat, a small courthouse was constructed. It was the first of three courthouses that would occupy the parcel. The second was a much larger, two-story building constructed in 1887. After a fire destroyed this building in 1902, the current courthouse was built and dedicated in 1904.

The establishment of Marshall as the county seat aided in its growth; coupled with the well-traveled National Road, more businesses and services began to develop including the construction of Col. Archer's stagecoach stop in 1841(now known as the Archer House). Situated at the junction of the National Road and the Vincennes-Chicago Road (now Illinois Route 1), it was built at a point to accentuate the junction of the two roads. This feature also made the building distinctive and allowed for viewable signage to anyone traveling through. The stagecoach stop housed overnight guests as well as served meals, both of which were needed due to the regularity of the stagecoach schedule. In 1838, prior to the stop's construction, the line ran only three times a week. By 1842, the stage lines ran on a daily basis. Marshall grew throughout the 1840s; however, by the 1850s the emergence of railroads, coupled with the town's inability to obtain its own railroad along with the decline of the National Road, saw a pause in local growth.

In 1850, Marshall's first railroad was chartered. However, through a series of poor decisions and failure to get state recognition of the charter, the railroad was not finalized until 1865. Construction began on the St. Louis, Vandalia, & Terre Haute Railroad in 1867. It was a line running east to west, from Terre Haute, Indiana across Illinois to St. Louis, Missouri. The rail line ran parallel to the north of Marshall and was completed in 1870. The town saw advantages of the railroad from receiving and exporting goods as well as passenger service, however Marshall wanted to have a line run through town to aid in its prosperity.

In 1855, the Wabash Valley Railroad was chartered and surveying began from Chicago to Vincennes. The line was to run north to south and follow the existing Vincennes-Chicago Road, thus bringing it through Marshall. However, a lack of funds halted the project. After the Civil War, the project was revived under the Chicago, Danville, and Vincennes Railroad, which was completed to Danville (50 miles north of Marshall). Because this rail line did not reach Marshall, a new company, the Paris and Danville, was formed. It was constructed through Marshall, on what is now Michigan Avenue, in the winter of 1874-75. Finally having access to a rail line that traveled through Marshall created substantial opportunities and saw expansive growth in the town. The line passed "...through the central part of the city and has given its development and growth an impetus which the other failed to do."⁴ The Paris and Danville line remained, and in 1879 merged with the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis Railroad (also known as the Big Four). The line remained at its location on Michigan Avenue until 1907, when a new line was constructed about a mile east of town.

Due to the new railroad, Marshall saw its largest growth. Banks, grocery stores, and large commercial blocks with multiple storefronts were built with some being remodeled in the early 1880s. Many improvements were made including the addition of street lighting and the construction of sidewalks. A city ordinance in 1875 stated that new construction of buildings in the business district were to be of brick; this included lots fronting or contiguous to the public square and any lot fronting the National Road as far east as Michigan Avenue.⁵ The ordinance was to hinder the spread of fire, but it also established continuity for the business district. By the 1900s the bulk of Marshall's building stock was constructed and housed businesses such as restaurants, saloons, bakeries, banks, clothing, hardware, and even an undertaker.

³ Perrin, History, 245.

⁴ Perrin, History, 318.

⁵ Perrin, History, 314.

In the mid-1910s, roads were again spotlighted due to the automobile. State roads were being established along old road routes and the National Road was experiencing a renewed importance. In 1918, Illinois Route 1 was established from Chicago and traveled to the Ohio River; the road followed the old Vincennes-Chicago Road running north and south. It traveled to Marshall where it became Michigan Avenue then continued south. By the 1920s, federal aid was available to improve the National Road for automobiles. In 1925 it was renamed US 40 and became part of a coast-to-coast highway. Marshall again prospered; now with auto dealerships, gas stations, and garages. Specifically, the lot just west of the Archer House was vacant until about 1926 when a garage was built. 614-616 Main St (now Archer Ave) developed with the change in transportation; what was once a buggy manufacturer changed to an auto dealership. Directly across the street of the new dealership, another new garage was built. It was all done to accompany the new mode of transport.

The National Road, now US 40, remained a major highway for automobile travel through Marshall for the next fifty years. Route 1 also remained important as a connection to Chicago. During this period, Marshall's business district remained intact. The only changes were to the function of buildings with only a few being fully remodeled due to fire or to reflect the mid-century style.

Overall, Marshall's period of significance reflects changing attitudes towards travel and modes of transportation with its majority of growth during the railroad era. Automobile travel did not hinder this growth, but ultimately added to the appeal of the business district because of the National Road and US 40. Because the road served a central role, evolving from a frontier highway to a national connector, and because Marshall attracted rail to augment the downtown, the business district remained important to the community. The continuity of use allowed Marshall's business district to remain intact, maintaining its density and sense of space.

Criterion C: Architecture

The Marshall Business Historic District exemplifies styles in architecture ranging from Greek Revival (1841 Archer House) to Mid-Century Modern (1958 Marshall Mutual). However, the majority of buildings in the district reflect the town's period of significant growth (1870-1910) exemplifying the Italianate, Romanesque, and Italian Renaissance Revival styles. As the town moved into the automobile age, buildings were constructed to reflect the new era with the streamlined styles of Commercial, Moderne, and Mid-Century Modern.

Greek Revival:

The Greek Revival style was a popular style of domestic architecture from about 1830-1850 and became known as the "National Style".⁶ The style was dominant in areas settled during this period and often brought to the west from eastern settlers. It is a style comprised of a gabled or low pitch roof with the cornice emphasized by molding. It typically has a centered entry with either a one- or two-story porch supported by columns. The façade is symmetrical with multiple bays.

The Archer House (1841) exemplifies the Greek Revival style with its side gable roof, symmetrical façade and centered entry with one-story columned porch. Of interest, as the style was known as the "National Style", it seems fitting the Archer House was constructed on the National Road.

Italianate:

First developed in early 1800s England, the Italianate style was a part of the Picturesque movement and drew from informal Italian farmhouses. By the 1840s, the United States began recognizing the style due to the popularity of Andrew Jackson Downing's pattern books. While the designs were intended for residential design, the style became prominent in commercial design. Most notably, the Italianate style is comprised of a cornice with large brackets and panels. The brackets and panels could be simple in design, however most were highly decorative. In addition, the windows were often segmental arches with cast iron hoods. Some hoods would have a decorative keystone. Commercial storefronts were typically framed in cast iron, with some specifically manufactured by George L. Mesker or the Mesker Brothers, who were popular in the Midwest due to their facilities in Evansville and St. Louis respectively. The use of these cast iron storefronts made possible vast window displays that allowed natural light to penetrate into the business space. Both Mesker designs included decorative cornices, brackets, and panels to cast iron pilasters with floral motifs; all that could be purchased separately or as whole sets.

Primarily, the upper stories of the 700, 600, and 500 blocks of Archer Avenue reflect the Italianate style with bracketed cornices, decorative panels, and segmental arch windows with decorative hoods. The commercial buildings around the courthouse square also reflect the style, however some are more simplistic. Those that are better representatives of the style include addresses 606 and 608 Archer Avenue and 124 S. 5th Street. All have the highly decorative bracketed cornices, hooded segmental arch windows, and large display windows. Keystones are also prominent. Nine addresses on Archer Ave (702, 624, 620, 619, 617, 612, 609, and 520-518) all have iron elements manufactured by Mesker.

Romanesque:

The Romanesque style became popular in the United States with the designs of H. H. Richardson in the 1880s. The style was typically used in residential and civic design, but was not as prevalent in commercial construction. The style consists of coursed, rusticated stone; however, stone and brick could be used. Some designs used only brick, smoothing the typical rough surface of Romanesque buildings; if only brick was used, decorative wall patterns were created to "rough" the surface. Windows were rounded arches and in groups of three or more. Rounded arch headers would spring from a separating brick pier or pedestal that separated the façade into bays.

The addresses, 121 and 123 S. 6th Street and 611 Archer Avenue specifically exemplify this style. 121 and 123 S. 6th Street have the upper stories of two sets of four window groupings. The top half-story has the rounded arch window and decorative brick round arch header springing from a stone stringcourse sill. The second story windows all have a rusticated stone header and stone stringcourse sill. 611 Archer Avenue has a second story three-window grouping with rounded arch windows. A brick rounded arch header springs from brick piers. Decorative brickwork above the second story windows creates a checkered pattern.

Italian Renaissance Revival:

Influenced by the designs of McKim, Mead & White, the Italian Renaissance Revival style became popular in the 1880s and was classically inspired. Looking to Italy for inspiration, the style was more formal than the earlier Italianate style due in part to the architects' first-hand experience with Italian architecture versus the early pattern books. It is elegant in style and was typically used in public buildings. Characteristics of the style include a flat roof with a dentil cornice and roofline balustrade. Facades were symmetrical with arches above entrances and the entrance accented by classical columns or pilasters. Windows had either pediment or arched hoods, and sometimes both. Quoins accented the corners of the building and the first story had rusticated stonework courses. The upper stories would have a smooth finish. A recessed second story porch with a Palladian window was often present.

At first glance, the Clark County Courthouse appears to be an Italianate design because of its cupola, or possibly Neo-Classical design due to its decorative columns. However, on closer inspection, it exemplifies the Italian Renaissance Revival style with its corner quoins, rusticated first story, pediment and arched windows. It also has the symmetrical façade with accented entrance with a colonnade porch. Above the porch is a balustrade in front of a Palladian window.

Commercial Style:

Originating in Chicago after the fire of 1871, construction techniques began using steel framing in commercial buildings. The steel frame construction allowed for open floor plans and an expanse of large metal-framed plate glass windows. The exterior is often covered in masonry cladding with limited ornamentation and has a flat parapet. The Chicago architectural firms of Adler and Sullivan and Burnham and Root assisted in pioneering the style.

Hoggatt's Appliance, 615 Archer Avenue, exemplifies the style with its minimal ornamentation, wide expanse of storefront windows, and the interior open floor plan.

Moderne:

The Moderne style became a design influence during and after the Art Deco period between 1920 and 1940. Moderne is more streamlined than Art Deco, having a smooth wall surface, flat roof, and horizontal stringcourses to emphasize the horizontal effect. Stylized motifs occur as decorative elements on the façade. It was influenced by the streamlined design of ships, airplanes, and automobiles.

The post office at 115 N. 7th Street has characteristics of this style due to its smooth surface, minimal ornamentation, and horizontal stringcourses that creates the horizontal emphasis.

Mid-Century Modern:

Emerging out of World War II, Mid-Century Modern is a style encompassing efficiency and economy. Designed with simplistic forms and minimal ornamentation, entrances on commercial structures were often large, floor-to-ceiling plate glass windows with plate glass doors. If ornamentation was present, it was typically plain glass curtain walls or anodized aluminum grilles. Unusual forms were also used with tilted roofline and exaggerated geometric forms. These were common in residential design as well as clerestory windows that hug the tilted roofline.

602-604 Archer Avenue embodies the simplistic form and minimal ornamentation of the style. Its entrance has floor-to-ceiling plate glass windows with an architectural glass wall surround. 625 Archer Ave also embodies some Mid-Century detailing with a geometric form projecting from its front façade. A fenestration of windows mimics the clerestory windows in residential design.

Verbal Boundary Description (Describe the boundaries of the property.)

The Marshall Commercial Historic District is shown on the accompanying site plan. The National Register boundary encloses all buildings, sites and structures:

- facing Archer Avenue between Michigan Avenue and S. 5th excluding the fire station on northeast corner of Archer Avenue and Michigan Avenue, but including the building on northwest corner of Archer and N. 5th Streets (424 Archer Avenue)
- facing S. 5th, between Archer and Locust
- facing Locust between S. 5th and S. 6th, including building on southeast corner of Locust and S. 6th (603 Locust)
- facing S. 6th between Locust and Archer Streets
- facing N. 7th Street; includes only one building on southeast corner of N. 7th and Plum Streets (115 N. 7th)

Boundary Justification (Explain why the boundaries were selected.)

District boundaries were chosen based on the most significant concentration of Marshall's historic commercial buildings that are associated with the commercial district during its period of significance (1841-1963) and retain adequate integrity, portraying their relationship to the historic business district. Residential properties, new construction and significantly altered properties comprise the boundary outside of the district in each direction.
