DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Pitman Grove Historic District is a trapezoid shaped area, with the long dimension running very roughly north-south. The southern end is squared off, terminating at Laurel Avenue. The northern boundary takes its shape from the irregular bend in Holly Avenue. The east and west sides run parallel roughly 4 1/2 blocks apart. The central portion of the district is a large square roughly 4 blocks on a side. Twelve pedestrian pathways radiate from the center of the square. These pathways are lined with small wood frame cottages of 1, 1 & 1/2, and 2 stories.

Each corner of the square is cut off at 45° by a short avenue. These form triangular islands which are landscaped as parks. (photo 6) The resulting street pattern within the square is that of an octagonal wheel with 12 spokes. The off-center hub is landscaped with grass and a few shrubs. It contains the Pitman Grove auditorium, the architectural focal point of the area. The southern edge of the square is abutted by 4 residential blocks with houses similar to those within the square. The north edge of the square abuts an area of predominantly larger houses on individual lots. The western edge of the district is enclosed by a row of larger residences. Many of which are double houses.

Although 3 sides of the district have retained their original setting, just east of the district is the present commercial area of town, with low-rise buildings, parking lots, and glass shop fronts. The northern end of the district occurs at Holly Avenue. Beyond it is an early 20th century suburb with several mid-20th century tract houses. Behind the houses which form the districts western border, is a series of athletic fields with trees and fences between them. The southern end of the district peters out into the suburban housing of similar character but of somewhat later construction.

Despite the demolition of a few of the old houses within the district, there is only one intrusion. This is a modern 2 story fire house in the southwest corner of the square. However, it does not offend owing to its small size and its maintenance of the scale of the surrounding buildings. There are several structures which are worthy of individual note. The auditorium is a basilican plan building whose entrance faces 1st Avenue. The polygonal apse is surmounted by a conical roof and a lancet cupola. The clear-story has Queen Anne windows inset. Each bay of the lower story is closable off from the exterior by a garage door. (photo 2 & 25)

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Urban Planning

Pitman Grove is a good surviving planned community from the 19th century. It was also a camp meeting town, and represents a form of religious practice which was quite widespread in its time.

There were a number of such communities in New Jersey, including Ocean Grove, Island Heights, and Mount Taber, but these all had fairly ordinary plans based upon a grid. Of New Jersey's camp meeting towns, Pitman Grove's plan with its spoked wheel configuration is the most interesting and unusual.

Architecture

Although the buildings lack individual distinction, their high pitched roofs, simple massing, and doll house scale give the Grove charm and evocativeness. In addition, the radial pathways set up vistas whose rhythmic progressions of gables are made more interesting by subtle variation in height. Moreover, Pitman is a surviving 19th Century environment, complete with most of the styles which were popular from 1870 to 1900. It demonstrates the ways in which these styles were burlesqued to produce picturesque effects on ordinary buildings.

The 3 story, 7 bay, building at 166 East Avenue, has a clapboard exterior. The largest building in the district, it served as a hostile during the camp meetings. (photo 21)

On the circle surrounding the auditorium are a pair of elaborately decorated cottages. There is a Second Empire cottage whose knee wall garrett is formed by a half scale mansard roof. There is also a miniature mansard roofed tower and an Eastlake porch with oriental detailing. (photo 13) Next door is a gable fronted cottage whose ornate jigsaw detailing represents a bastardized version of the Italianate style. (photo 12)

The 2 story cottage at 134 North Avenue has board and batton construction on the second story, and attached shed, which is articulated to resemble half timpering. The front gable features a mock tie beam and barge boards. (photo 11)

Number 11 West Avenue and number 106 9th Street are two major examples of Eastlake Styling. Both are 2 story cottages with turned columns on the porches; and turned members in the railings, (which run between the columns and under the eaves). In both cases the porches are entered at an angle of 45°. And in both cases the entrances are articulated as open gables. (Photos 18 & 24)

Number 224 West Avenue is a double house with 2 front gables. The Italianate porch posts support the second story directly, and the porch is formed by recessing the 1st floor back about 8 ft. from the front of the house. (This porch district). This house is important because it retains its narrow gable, vertical beeded wall boarding, on both interior and exterior. This material was typical of most of the cottages when they were first built. But many have since been shingled or clapboarded over. (photo 16)

Number 16 12th Avenue is the smallest cottage in the district, with 1 floor, 2 rooms, a one bay hip roof porch, and frontal gablet. (photo 22)

Number 23 Webb Avenue is one of a number of larger houses, in the northern area of the district, which have "L" shaped plans. All have 2 stories and all are entered near the inner corner of the "L". This one has a rounded 1 story porch filling in the corner of the "L". The porch, which is entered at 45° angle to the house, has Eastlake details including some elaborate lattice work under the entablature. (photo)

A similar house, at number 35 Webb Avenue, has a 3 story pyramid roffed tower, closing in the inner corner or its "L" plan. (photo 10)

Many of the cottages, within the central "wagon wheel" are of 1 and 1/2 stories with a knee wall condition on the second floor. The most elaborately decorated of these is at 127 1st Street. It has a 3 bay tuscan porch, a rough shingled front and Queen Anne windows whose sashes are bordered with small panes. (photo 24)

Another such cottage, at 125 10th Street, has an Eastlake porch, and a pair of french doors inscribed under a lunette. The upstairs window has round head top with lattice infill. (photo 14)

Approximatley 10% of the houses have a corner entrance, set at a 45° angle to the house front. Most houses have turned column porches, and many have barge boards and railings, some of which are Eastlake, some Italianate, and a few oriental. (photo 29)

The area is well planted with large oak trees, which soften the visual transition from house to house.

A map delineating the district boundary and historic properties is attached.

1. In the Grove Area

Within the wheel area, approximately 15% of the structures retain their original exterior appearance in total. Approximately 80% of the original porches survive, and only a handful of these have been screened in. The most prevalent alteration in the wheel area has been residing (approximately 85%). Virtually all of this took place between about 1930 and the 1950's. Of the resided houses, approximately 20% were recovered in asbestos, 30% in asphalt resempling bricks and approximately 50% in asphalt shingling, mostly grey or brown in color. Most of the fenestration is original.

2. Outside the Grove Area

The houses outside the wheel date from the late 19th or early 20th centuries. All are frame, and they are generally larger than in the inner grove. About 75% have a full two stories. Again most of the porches remain. In addition, a larger percentage retain their original siding (approximately 50%). (Mostly clapboard or wainscotting)

Most of the resided houses are covered in asphalt shingle. There are also a handful of asbestos sided houses. About 70% of the two-story houses outside the wheel are of the type and configuration described in the example at 23 Webb Avenue. Approximately 10% are of the type and configuration described at 11 West Avenue, and the rest are double houses of the type described at 224 West Avenue. The smaller houses are located mostly, though not entirely, in the southern end of the district. These houses are similar to the ones within the grove area.

The Auditorium is a late 19th century framed basilican structure with side aisles and an apse end surmounted by a cupola. All trusses are exposed, and the interior is characterized by rows of wooden benches. At one time, only the second story was enclosed, and each bay was open to the air. The second story has since been stuccoed, the entrance end has been enclosed with concrete modular units, and the side bays have been enclosed with garage-type doors, but the interiors are intact as is the basic massing and overall appearance.

In summation, the only major change that most structures have undergone is residing. Everything else, including massing and fenestration, is more or less as it was. The configuration of the town remains and gives a strong visual sence of a camp meeting community with its cottages clustered around the auditorium. The public spaces have all retained their shapes, character, and feeling despite the differing textures of new siding materials. This is partly because the small scale houses and the rythm they create along the street have a distinctiveness which cannot be easily effaced. It also stems from the fact that neither the new nor the old siding materials have a particularly strong visual impact in and of themselves. The old wainscotting was not particularly striking, and the asbestos or asphalt siding only has a marked texture in a handful of cases.

In the 19th Century camp meetings constituted the frontiersman's sabbath. This was the cultural base of early Methodism. With improved transportation and urbanization the church changed. The camp meetings enjoyed a resurgence after the Civil War. This resulted from renewed interest generated by the Centenary of Methodism in America, in 1866. The centenary camp, at nearby Barnsboro, employed a circular plan with radiating streets lined with tents. By the summer of 1869 the camp meeting attracted thousands of visitors. But the camp could not be expanded owing to adjacent marlpits, whose mining possibilities precluded any other use. In June of 1871 a group, which included a number of officials of the Centenary camp, formed the New Jersey Conference Camp Meeting Association, which had authority to adopt ordinances governing people within the bounds of the area. Shares were sold to raise money. Seventy acres were purchased near the RR line in the present location of Pitman. At this time, a close relationship was established with the Ocean Grove Camp Meeting Association. Dr. A. E. Ballard was an officer in both groups. It was felt that a rural resort like Pitman, would be an excellent complement to a seaside resort like Ocean Grove. The association decided to name the new camp meeting after Reverend Charles Pitman (1796-1854) whose religious oratory was renown in his time. Pitman was a native of New Jersey who spoke at many camp meetings during the first half of the 19th Century.

The New Jersey Conference Camp Meeting Association retained title to the land but guaranteed occupancy for an annual rent for tent lots.

At the Association Meeting in April 1871 "Brother Perry stated that the plan for the camp ground was in the process of preparation by Mr. Sloan, an architect of Philadelphia, but was not ready for submission". There is speculation that this referred to Samuel Sloan, a prominent architect, writer and editor of Architectural Review. It is not known if Sloan's plan was adopted but if it was, the execution was inept. This is suggested by the fact that the disposition of the radial pathways is irregular, and the fact that the auditorium is not quite central. This result can also be explained by the theory that Pitman's plan was taken from the plan of the Centenary Campground.

Concessions were sold to merchants for the privilege of selling provisions and services to campers. This resulted in a number of squabbles between local farmers and those who had purchased concession rights. Another perennial problem was the proper observance of the sabbath. The railroad had made an agreement with the Directors of the Camp Meeting not to stop at Pitman on Sundays, during camp meetings. This caused considerable inconvenience for the growing number of permanent residents. This resulted in periodic friction between the Camp Meeting Association and local residents.

The appeal of the Camp Meeting was two fold. For the city residents, the rural camp meeting helped to stave off the summer "back sliding" away from religion. For the farmers the camp meeting offered a social and exciting experience which was in sharp contrast to their somewhat boring lives.

Amenities began to appear at Pitman. During the Camp Meeting of 1878 a visitor noted, "no longer were there white tents among the brush wood trees," furnished with haunches for seats and straw for beds." Instead there were graveled walks, a large store, 4 restaurants, a barbers shop, an ice cream saloon and about 300 cottages. Two weeks prior to the opening of the camp meeting strings of wagons delivered supplies, six trains per day arrived, and the cottages filled up. Services were held continuously from 5 a.m. to 10 p.m.

Although Pitman was intended to be a summer resort, by the early 1880's Pitman began to attract a permanent population. Train service was good and Pitman became a suburb for people who commuted from Camden and Philadelphia. By 1895 there were about 100 families living in Pitman. The winter population of 1896 was approximately 1000. Another landmark in the growth of the town was the establishment of a schoolhouse. In 1884 the Pitman school district was created and the schoolhouse was built that winter.

As the 19th Century ended, these factors were leading in the direction of self government for Pitman. There were problems with road repair and grading, which it seemed could not be solved by Mantua Township, which governed Pitman. In addition, residents had to travel to Mantua to vote and pay taxes. In 1903 a new paper, the Pitman Grove Review pushed for the incorporation of Pitman as a borough. There was a feeling that Mantua Township was taking more money out of Pitman than it was producing in services. On October 20, 1904 the town held a meeting in the Knights of the Golden Eagle Hall, where it was decided 122 to 35 to petition the state legislature for incorporation. The petitioning committee included J. W. Newkirk, J. M. McCowan, and J. C. Rulon. On May 24, 1905 the petition was granted.

Although camp meetings are still held in Pitman, the borough now owns all of the land which was once controlled by the Camp Meeting Association.
