The O'Dell House is located on a small rise near the French Broad-River at Old Newport. The river location and the obvious antiquity of the structure form a striking sight in coming upon the property.

The house was built in 1814 by Abel Gilleland. It is a two-story Federal style brick structure built upon a stone foundation. The door frames (first and second floors) are the most unusual aspect of the home. The upper frame is curved at the top; the lower is rectangular. Windows outline each door. From a photograph taken earlier in this century it appears that the original facade was never altered; unfortunately, the porch and steps from the door have fallen down. The ceiling of the second floor is not as high as that of the first; the windows are complementary—not as tall on the second floor. "S" shaped hinges protrude on the exterior at the separation of the floors.

Under what was the front porch a door leads to a full basement. Behind the house a kitchen add utility space were added. The addition is a one story clapboard structure. The interior appears to be in fair condition.

The O'Dell House is the only remnant of "New Port" (or Old Newport) The town was the original seat of Cocke County government. It was laid out in 1799. "New Port" lay at the juncture of the Washington Post Road (via Jonesboro) and another post road going to North Carolina. The French Broad was navigable as far as "New Port." The town was originally the site of Fine's Ferry, an operation run by Peter Fine as early as 1787. The southern landing of Fine's Ferry would be comparable to the side yard of the O'Dell House.

Abel Gilleland, the first owner of the property, was the son of John Gilleland who settled in the area in 1783. The elder Gilleland was an organizer of the State of Franklin; he was a delegate to the convention of 1785; and he gave the land to the Cocke County commissioners upon which "New Port" was built.

The townsite moved about 3 miles west to the present county seat of Cocke County, Newport, around 1867 after the railroad was built along Pigeon River.

The O'Dell house is very significant to the area because it is the only physical reminder of the once-bustling town of Old Newport. It is also significant architecturally as a good example of the type of residence built by men of prominence in early East Tennessee, relatively few of which are still to be found in this area.
