SUMMARY

The two-level Boudreaux/Robison house, located west of the Menio Park Neighborhood, at 101 N. Bella Vista Drive (Survey #7a-2) in the Tucson Terrace Addition, is one of the three significant Volcanic Stone Vernacular buildings included in the Survey Area. The family residence of Leon J. Boudreaux, a locally prominent builder, City Council member, and the owner/manager of Las Piedras Rest Home (another near-by volcanic stone structure), the residence is one of the earliest structures built in the area, probably dating back to 1908. Constructed of vesicular basalt probably from the nearby A Mountain guarry, the Boudreaux/Robison house is one of the six or so surviving structures of comparable age in Tucson using the material for its walls as well as its foundations. The Boudreaux/Robison house is an excellent example of a rare property type of buildings sharing a common method of construction using a regionally significant structural material. Considered to be Vernacular, or without a designated architectural style, the building exhibits a high degree of workmanship and was built by a stone mason named Mr. Kurtz, who lived at the base of Sentinel Peak. Though the original property included more land and a second residence, the Boudreaux/Robison house remains in its original location. During the historic era, in 1929, there were sensitive additions to the second level and modifications to the interior have also been made. In excellent condition, the Boudreaux/Robison house remains sufficiently unaltered to reflect the original artistry of volcanic stone masonry construction for which it is considered significant, although it is cloaked under a thick screen of trumpet vine.

SITE AND SETTING

The Boudreaux/Robison house is located on lot 1 and the south 6' of lot 2, block 1 of Tucson Terrace, on the east slope of an unnamed hill, just west of Sentinel Peak, with a panoramic view of Tucson and the mountain ranges beyond. The 150' by 56' lot is at the corner of Bella Vista Drive and High Street; both dirt roads. To the north of the Boudreaux/Robison house is a residence which until recently, pertained to the property, serving as a guest house. The guest house was sold along with approximately 40% of the original land. A high, wood fence currently divides the two properties. At the time the Boudreaux/Robison house was built, there were practically no other structures in the vicinity except Vernacular farmhouses. The other two volcanic stone buildings at 1408 W. Congress Street and 25 N. Westmoreland Avenue were being constructed around this same time. The Boudreaux/Robison house, built of local material and placed in a natural, desert setting must have fitted in very well with its environment, as it does to this day.

CONSTRUCTION

The Boudreaux/Robison house is constructed of massive volcanic stone walls approximately 18" thick. The walls are composed of uncoursed, rubble masonry. The foundation is also of vesicular basalt. The floors and roof are of wood frame construction and the windows are wood sash, double hung. Outside window sills are 2' deep and 2" thick. Openings over the entry, windows and the porch are spanned by stone arches.

ORIGINAL APPEARANCE

According to Dr. Seth Schindler, previous occupant of 101 N. Bella Vista Drive, who did a State Level Inventory of the property in 10/1981, what was then called the Boudreaux house was built in stages. The following description is based upon that of Dr. Schindler. Situated on a the side of a hill with the main entrance facing east. the house consisted of two levels, the lower being partly subterranean at the rear. A steep set of stone and concrete stairs led to a 12' by 15' covered porch. The porch had a wooden floor, massive stone support columns and arched openings. From the porch, entry was made through the original carved door with bevelled glass. Entry into the lower level of the house was made from the lower tier of the front patio to a door beneath the porch on the south side. In 1929, three additional rooms on the top floor were added to the south and west of the original structure, doubling the square footage of the top floor to about 2000 S.F. The stone wall construction and the roof line matched the original 1908 structure sensitively, if not exactly. According to Dr. Schindler, "(i)n terms of its architecture and visual impact, the Boudreaux house has long been recognized as special by the local community. Locally, it is referred to as the 'Castle'...Most prominent, and no doubt responsible for its local name, is the forceful, massive effect of the front facade jutting out at the viewer, the large arched openings and 5' thick stone pillars, the luxuriant old vines from roof level to ground level, the terraced landscaping and the combination of stone and iron fencing broken by vertical columns."

INTERIOR

Although the exterior of the Boudreaux/Robison house retains its integrity, the interior has been considerably modified. The large L shaped "family room" of the residence today, which includes the entrance, is a modification of what was once said to have been two or three rooms, one of which was a bedroom. The fireplace with its stone hearth, wood mantel, decorative cast bronze facing plate and built-in wood shelf units must have served the original living room. There was no doubt a dining room as part of the new L shaped space. The kitchen occupies its original location, but a small room on the south side of the kitchen, now used as a pantry/utility room was probably the original bathroom. To the north of the kitchen, what is now a small, enclosed rectilinear room with a subterranean west wall was mostly likely an open air sleeping porch. The lower level of the house consists of a room of the same dimensions as the porch above, with three windows, stuccoed walls and rounded corners. A west side entry opens into a similar plastered, rectangular room which has vent windows. This room is roughly the same dimensions as the L shaped room above, but it terminates in an unfinished crawl space. There is also a bathroom and a storage area in the lower level. Although these rooms were part of the original structure, they may not have been finished. The finish work was said to have been done in the 1970's.

CURRENT APPEARANCE AND ALTERATIONS

The Boudreaux/Robison house is at present in excellent condition and appears to have been well maintained over the years by its chain of owners. The east and north walls of the house as well as the stone porch pillars are covered with the same trumpet vine, probably over sixty years old to date. A non original aluminum sliding door has been installed in the 1929 bedroom addition opening, but other than this modification the exterior appears to have had no further alterations. The remodelling of the interior, as described above has included wall removal and change of use of spaces. However, essential features of the interior, such as the fireplace remain intact. An attempt has been made to maintain these early features which clearly identify the interior with its era. The interior alterations and slight modifications to the exterior do not constitute significant compromises to the integrity of the building.

SIGNIFICANCE

The Boudreaux/Robison house is locally significant under National Register Criterion C as an excellent example of a comparatively rare Volcanic Stone Vernacular building in the Menlo Park Neighborhood Survey Area. It is one of six or so surviving structures built around 1910 in Tucson, half of which are situated in the Survey Area near the A Mountain quarry which was closed around the 1930's. Most of the substantial additions to the house were made in 1929, during the historic era, and they were compatible. They building conveys a high degree of stone masonry craftsmanship and a high level of integrity of architectural form, massing and materials. Changes have not adversely impacted the predominant structural technology for which the property is considered significant. It is significant for its contribution to architectural development in Tucson from 1905 to 1941.

WORKMANSHIP

It must be surmised that the design of the Boudreaux house was that of its original owner/builder, Leon Boudreaux. According to a letter of Mr. Boudreaux's son, Sam, a stone mason known as Mr. Kurtz, who lived at the foot of A Mountain, was hired to construct the original portion of the residence at 101 N. Bella Vista Drive. It is unknown which craftsman was responsible for the 1929 addition. Constructed of uncoursed, rubble masonry, the unsquared pieces of stone were set without continuous horizontal joint lines in both the original structure and the addition.

INTEGRITY

Other than slight modifications to the exterior, and remodelling of the interior there have been no substantive changes to the Boudreaux/Robison house which remains an excellent example of the three, rare Volcanic Stone Vernacular buildings in the Menlo Park Neighborhood Survey Area.
