Summary Paragraph

Highland Springs is an unincorporated community of Henrico County located along Nine Mile Road about 4 miles east of the City of Richmond. Originally developed as a residential community along a trolley line that led from downtown Richmond to the Seven Pines National Cemetery, Highland Springs is considered a suburb of Richmond today. The principal resources of the historic district are its rich collection of residential architecture of a variety of styles and periods, along with its Art-Deco style Henrico Theatre, individually listed in the National Register in 2005. Nine Mile Road, the commercial corridor of Highland Springs, is lined with one- and two-story buildings of either frame or concrete block construction with brick, vinyl, wood, rusticated block, or stucco siding, displaying an assortment of styles including Colonial Revival, Commercial, Contemporary, Craftsman, Italianate, Minimal Traditional, Moderne, Modernist, Post-Modern, Queen Anne, and Tudor Revival styles.

Although originally established in 1890, Highland Springs developed relatively slowly until after World War I, and even then, really did not see a building boom until after World War II. Early houses reflect the Folk Victorian, Italianate, Queen Anne, and a variety of vernacular styles of the period from before World War I. After the war and before World War II, more houses were built in the Colonial Revival, Craftsman, Dutch Revival, Tudor Revival, and later, Minimal Traditional, styles. From 1946 to 1969, 63% of houses contributing to the district in Highland Springs were constructed. These reflect popular housing styles of the time, with Minimal Traditional and Ranch comprising 87% of houses built during those 22 years. The district also includes seven undeveloped park preserves, a water tower, and a large lot containing the structures that protect Bonanza Springs, one of the many springs once located within the district that inspired the community's name. That lot also contains the trace of a road that once led from what is now Washington Street to the spring and beyond.

The district has high integrity to the period of significance, from 1890 to 1969.

Narrative Description

LOCATION

Highland Springs is an unincorporated community of Henrico County located about 4 miles east of the City of Richmond boundaries. The community was developed as one of several nineteenth-century "streetcar suburbs" in the Richmond area, and one of hundreds located throughout the country. Highland Springs began as a residential community established on a trolley line that led from downtown Richmond to the Seven Pines National Cemetery. The trolley ran down the middle of Nine Mile Road and, although its tracks have been either removed or paved over, the alignment of that section of the road as it leads through Highland Springs towards the cemetery betrays its origins.

Highland Springs Historic District is roughly trapezoidal in shape and oriented northwest to southeast along Nine Mile Road, its primary thoroughfare. The district is bounded by Washington Street to the northeast, generally Spruce and Fairpoint avenues to the southeast, generally East Nine Mile Road and then Read Street to the southwest, and the rear lot line of properties on the northwest side of Bridge Street. This boundary was based roughly on the first three plats of the community, drafted in 1890 for its founder Edmund S. Read, the plat drafted in 1895 for the expansion on the west side of Nine Mile Road, and the "Plan for Highland Springs," drafted in 1901 by T. Crawford Redd & Bro., Surveyors and Engineers (refer to additional information and graphics in Section 8).

SETTING/LANDSCAPE

Highland Springs was laid out on the gentle slopes of the Chickahominy River valley, which fall from a ridge that divides the Chickahominy and James river watersheds. Between Highland Springs and the river to the northeast lie other residential subdivisions and some remnants of pre-Civil War historic farms. The district's sloping topography is dissected by two large tributaries to the Chickahominy and numerous small drainages, which give the district a varied and rolling character. Only a narrow section of Highland Springs on the southwest side of the ridge falls towards the James. Nine Mile Road follows the ridge before it descends to enter the hamlet of Sandston to the southeast.

Several springs emerge from the gravelly sandy loams that underlie most of the Highland Springs district, and their waters fall generally toward the Chickahominy. Two of these springs were protected by park reservations incorporated into the subdivision in 1890. Another, Bonanza Springs, located in the southeast corner of Highland Springs, was set aside as the community's waterworks and protected by a large surrounding tract of forest.

Mature trees are scattered throughout the district, although the greatest concentrations of tree cover are found in its stream valleys and particularly on undeveloped tracts, particularly in the district's east corner. There are many mature trees within the district that appear to pre-date the development and likely survive from the nineteenth century or earlier. Individual residential lots exhibit well-maintained plantings of small trees, shrubs, and other ornamental species.

ARCHITECTURAL CHARACTER

Introduction

Highland Springs Historic District contains 2,393 resources on 1,295 properties across approximately 390.6 acres.¹ The gridiron street layout of the community is oriented around the northwest to southeast axis represented by Nine Mile Road. Most buildings stand on 50-by-120-foot lots and face onto streets laid out perpendicular to Nine Mile Road and named for various species of trees and shrubs (Map 2). Any deviation from this pattern is the result of joined lots or odd-shaped lots along the edges of the original subdivision.

The following section describes the resources in the district and is divided into three sections. The first, Commercial/Civic/Religious, describes those resources directly fronting Nine Mile Road or immediately adjacent. Most of these resources are used for commercial or religious purposes, while only a handful are residential. The second section, Residential, describes the residential area of Highland Springs located mostly northeast of Nine Mile Road, although several blocks lie also southwest of Nine Mile Road. The third section, Parks and Public Lands, describes those lots set aside in the original subdivision as parkland or for water-related utilities.

Commercial/Civic/Religious

Nine Mile Road is the primary thoroughfare through Highland Springs, and is lined with commercial, civic, religious, and a few residential buildings that vary widely in age and style (Figure 1). Some of the residential buildings have been remodeled for commercial purposes and some commercial buildings for religious use. A large majority of commercial uses are automobile-related, including sales, repair, and fuel. Other uses include restaurants and one bakery, retail, insurance and other professional services, a pharmacy, a dry cleaner, hair salons, construction offices, medical offices, and a flooring store. The urban pattern is most compact in the oldest section of the commercial strip of Nine Mile Road, just south east of its intersection with Holly Avenue, which is also the dividing line between East and West Nine Mile roads. From that point, buildings become spaced more widely apart. There are many open lots without buildings, including parking lots (Figure 2).

Many architectural styles and elements are represented along Nine Mile Road in these commercial, civic, and residential buildings, including Italianate, Tudor, Art Deco, Art Moderne, Modernist, International, and Colonial Revival styles. The Art Deco-style Henrico Theatre, completed in 1936, is one of the best examples of a particular style within the district; the theater was individually listed in the National Register in 2005 (Figure 3). The other buildings display elements of a variety of styles but are not strong representatives of any particular one. In general, the Nine Mile Road corridor is lined with one- and two-story buildings of either frame or concrete block construction with brick, vinyl, wood, rusticated block, or stucco siding.

Early notable buildings along Nine Mile Road include two Italianate commercial style buildings from around 1900; one was Henrick's Store (043-5408) (Figure 4), which has a shed roof displaying its original scalloped tin shingles, and the other has a parapet roof and its original plate glass display windows (043-0737) (Figure 5). The Tudor Revival style is expressed along or close to Nine Mile in Edmond S. Read's 1896 brick house (043-0731) (Figure 6), with its faux-stepped-gable details and crenellated tower, and the 1909 Highland Springs Methodist Church (043-0286) (Figure 7) on Holly Avenue, with its Gothic windows and shaped parapet over the front entrance. Also of particular note is the 1914 Babcock Masonic Lodge building (043-5413) (Figure 8), which features a Flemish gable on its Nine Mile Road side, and the ca. 1921, front-gabled, former grocery store, now housing the 9 Mile Grill (043-5416) (Figure 9).

Many buildings on Nine Mile Road were constructed in the ten years after World War II, including the ca. 1950, International-style, former Hechler Motor Company building (043-5403) (Figure 10) and the 1948, Modernist-style, former Dee & Bee Food Store, with its plate glass windows and aerodynamic marquee, that is now being used to house a church (043-5401) (Figure 11). Other notable mid-century commercial buildings include the Modernist auto repair building at 200 West Nine Mile Road (043-5407), with its original plate glass and canted awning, and the International-style former service station at 601 East Nine Mile Road (043-5396), with its blue and white tile siding. The Modernist-style canted plate glass windows of Heavenly Burgers add character to East Nine Mile Road (043-5395) (Figure 12). Also of note is the 1963 Modernist commercial building at 109 West Nine Mile Road, with its rounded front and two angled brick pylons (043-5415) (Figure 13).

Building setbacks along Nine Mile Road vary. Most purpose-built commercial buildings have no front setback, while others are set back to allow for a parking lot; still others were originally built as residences with deep front yards. Many of the commercial buildings also have no side setback, and at the original commercial core of Highland Springs many share common walls. As a result, the streetscape of Nine Mile Road is most compact at its intersection with Holly and becomes less dense as Nine Mile Road stretches to the northwest and southeast (See Figures 1 and 2).

Sidewalks line both sides of Nine Mile Road and sometimes extend to front doors of buildings that are set back as much as around 35' from the right-of-way. Parking lots front many lots or extend from the side to the front right-of-way. Utility lines extend along both sides of the street and often cross the street. There is no unifying stylistic theme to the streetscape, although attempts have been made towards that goal by lining Nine Mile Road with period lighting standards and using period posts and frames for street signs.

Residential

The residential areas of Highland Springs that lie to the northeast and southwest of Nine Mile Road contain buildings representing every decade of development from 1890 to the present. From 1890 to the end of World War II, the residential areas of Highland Springs developed slowly. Today, houses constructed during that period represent only 37% of all contributing properties and only 24% of the entire district. The period between the end of World War II and the end of the period of significance, though, saw the development of 63% of the total number of

Highland Springs Historic District
Name of Property

County and State

contributing properties, or 39% of total properties within the district. The other 37% of properties within the district were developed after 1969 and contain no contributing resources.

The residential portion of Highland Springs, which comprises most of the district, is characterized by the fairly consistent front setbacks—around 35’—of the buildings, most of which face the street. Most lots are 120’ deep, although a few lots are up to 240’ deep by the joining of two lots for one residence. Lot depths also vary along Bridge Street and Ash Avenue because Bridge Street is not aligned with the larger grid. Most lots are 50’ wide, except where two or more lots along one street have been joined to build one house. Most of the very few vacant lots within the district are likely so because of the many small streams that pass through them.

Most front yards within the residential sections of Highland Springs have well-maintained front lawns, planted sometimes with beds of ornamental shrubs or perennials, and often shaded with large trees and ornamented with flowering trees. Newer houses have driveways in the front, although many older houses on corners have side or rear driveways. Although in the original Highland Springs plats, alleys were planned to run down the middle of each block, the alleys were never improved and exist on paper only. Generally, cars are parked in a driveway or off the road surface, but within the right-of-way. There is usually a concrete walkway leading to the front door on most lots.

Streets are paved in asphalt, but have no curb-and-gutter system; stormwater is directed off the pavement into swales that parallel the street on both sides; steel pipe culverts convey the water under driveways. Running parallel to the avenues are alleys that extend between each lot. Some are paved in gravel, while others have been either abandoned or never paved. Many sections of these alleys have been incorporated into the adjacent lot or simply used as an extension of back yards.

The earliest houses, dating from 1890 to 1916, represent 3% of all contributing properties and 2% of the entire district. These were built in Folk Victorian (37%), Vernacular (26%), Queen Anne (16%) Italianate (11%), Colonial Revival, and Tudor Revival styles with floor plans ranging from complex to shotgun. One of the earliest buildings, the Folk Victorian-style Highland Springs former trolley station, was built in 1890, presumably at a central location on Nine Mile Road, and then later moved to its current location at 5 South Holly Avenue. The station building is now sandwiched between two later additions, the front addition possibly dating to the 1920s (043-5735) (Figure 14). Another notable Folk Victorian building is located at 121 North Beech (043-5444; 043-5334-0055); it features gingerbread porch posts (Figure 15).

The Vernacular-style houses from this period include three I-houses dating from 1900 (043-5752 and 043-5807) (Figure 16) to 1910 (043-5422). The I-house is a British folk form found throughout Virginia and is typically a two-story, minimum two-bay and often three-bay building that is one room deep and usually has a porch of some kind. It can also have porches or ornament in Greek Revival, Italianate, or Gothic styles. Most I-houses have later additions that form an L-shape off the back of the house.

Another type of Vernacular-style house seen in Highland Springs is rectangular in plan with a low-hipped roof. Houses with this plan appear with a variety of types of porches and ornament. In Highland Springs, one house sports a quirky, Second Empire-style, multi-colored slate roof, but only on its front façade (043-5801) (Figure 17).

There are only five Queen Anne-style houses in the district, with three constructed prior to 1916. One is the fanciful Nicholas J. Roope House (043-5492), built in 1900 of wood frame construction and displaying many decorative details that characterize the Queen Anne style (Figure 18). The lot on which the house stands is richly planted in ornamental trees and shrubs and still features its original, gabled, mortared-cobble gate posts and boundary wall. Another is the 1915 Schoenbaum House (043-5420), built of rusticated concrete block and facing Nine Mile Road.

In addition, there are only three houses in the district that represent the Italianate style used for a dwelling, with two of them constructed during this period: 116 North Elm Street (043-5502) and 9 North Oak Avenue (043-5814), both built in 1900 (Figure 19).

1917-1945

The period between World War I and World War II in Highland Springs saw an increase in residential development; properties developed during this period comprise 34% of all contributing properties and 21% of the entire district.

Thirty-two percent of those houses were built in a Vernacular style and range between one and two stories with a variety of floor plans, additions, and porch types (Figures 20 and 21).

Twenty-six percent were built in the Craftsman style and most between 1935 and 1937 (Figures 22 and 23). This style is characterized by a low-pitched, gabled (and sometimes hipped) roof, with wide, unenclosed eaves with exposed roof rafters. Porches are either full or partial in width with roofs supported by tapered or square wood columns, or brick or native stone columns.² Many of these Craftsman-style houses can be found along Oak, New, and Kalmia avenues.

Another 23% of houses from this period were built in the Minimal Traditional style, with most constructed between 1935 and 1945 (Figures 24 and 25). The Minimal Traditional style was a simple and economical way to develop factory housing during, and veteran housing after, World War II. The style had its origins in a 1936 Federal Housing Administration publication, Principles of Planning Small Houses, which introduced the concept of the “minimum house.” Following this guide, one could realize maximum space with minimum investment through efficient design and construction. The publication provided guiding principles and several different variations on a standard 900-square-foot, one-story structure.³ In Highland Springs, North Oak, Elm, and Daisy avenues have large concentrations of dwellings in this style.

Of the remaining, the Colonial Revival style is represented in 9% of the houses. During this period, Colonial Revival is expressed in large front porches with, usually, Doric-style columns, applied to large, rectangular, two-story buildings (Figure 26). Folk Victorian is represented in 2% of the houses and is expressed in an ornamented, asymmetrical façade, sometimes featuring a bay window, but all applied to the same rectangular, two-story building (Figure 27).

Highland Springs Historic District
Name of Property

Henrico County, VA
County and State

Other styles represented include Tudor Revival (1%), Queen Anne (0.5%), and Dutch Revival (0.5%). The remaining 8% of houses built during this time were either a mixture of styles, or were so featureless that they pointed to no distinct, discernible style.

One notable trend seen in many houses of this period is the use of rusticated concrete block for wall cladding, raised foundations, and other features. The use of this block for foundations only is seen in 11 of the 19 displaying rustication. It is also used in combination with smooth concrete block to create rusticated quoins as corner accents and rusticated porch posts. In addition, at least two examples also feature accent blocks of smooth concrete with molded ornament (refer Figure 23).

1946-1969

The period between the end of World War II and the end of the period of significance saw a residential boom in Highland Springs. Buildings constructed during this time represent 63% of properties with contributing resources and 39% of the total properties within the district. Of the houses constructed during this time, 50% are Minimal Traditional in style, with Ranch style running a close second at 37%. Only 6% are Colonial Revival, and around 1% are either Vernacular, Craftsman, Modernist, or Contemporary in style. Five percent could not be identified as any distinct, discernible style.

The Ranch style began to be used in Highland Springs in 1950, but Minimal Traditional remained a favorite until the late 1950s; after 1959, Ranch became the predominant style for new homes (Figure 28). The Ranch style emerged from Southern California in the 1950s and spread throughout the U.S. as a symbol of relaxed, modern living. Generally, these houses are asymmetrical and one-story, with low-pitched roofs and wide eaves, giving an overall feeling of horizontality.⁴ The form of such houses is simple, but they may be ornamented with Colonial Revival shutters, turned porch columns, wrought iron railing, or Colonial-style lanterns. The expression of the Ranch style in Highland Springs is closer to the Minimal Traditional in its one-story, side-gable, rectangular form, but typically has a brick base or full brick walls, asymmetrical door and window placements, and Colonial Revival details.

Parks and Public Lands

The site for Highland Springs was chosen, in addition to its relatively high altitude, for its many springs and woodlands. The subdivision was laid out with seven small park reserves, two of which once contained notable springs. Small creeks issue from local springs and pass through the other five parks. These park reserves have never been developed for public use and have been allowed to grow up in secondary growth forest and brush, including exotic bamboo; they are all nearly impenetrable during the summer months.

Also included in the subdivision, although not indicated for public use, was the Bonanza Spring Waterworks, containing Bonanza Spring (Figure 29). This large spring was known as “Tucker’s Spring” during the Civil War,⁵ and also referred to as “Bonanza” Lithia Water Springs⁶ at the turn of the twentieth century. It was described in 1913 as

[o]ne of the largest in the county...situated in a hollow near a small run that flows into the Chickahominy River. The water rises from sands and gravel...from near the contact between the Chesapeake and the overlying Columbia sands. The flow, about 28 gallons per minutes, is said not to vary during the year. The water is soft, clear tasteless, and odorless, has been used for drinking purposes by several families at Highland Springs, and has been shipped to Richmond.⁷

Bonanza Spring is extant; its outlet protected by a large concrete pipe and the water is collected in a concrete spring box. The lot in which the spring lies also contains the trace of a road that once led from what is now Washington Street to the spring and beyond.

In addition to the park reserves, a lot was later set aside on West Vine Street between North Cedar and North Daisy avenues to house a water tower; it is surrounded by a chain-link fence (Figure 30).

INVENTORY

The following is a list of resources located within the Highland Springs Historic District boundaries. The resources are listed alphabetically by street name and numerically by address number. VDHR ID numbers for resources previously surveyed also are listed. In the following inventory all resources, both primary and secondary, have been considered either contributing or non-contributing based upon the areas of significance identified under Criterion A, Community Planning and Development and/or Social History, and/or under Criterion C, Architecture; the period of significance identified as 1890-1969; and whether the resource retains integrity. All non-contributing resources have therefore been so noted for being less than fifty years old or as lacking integrity to represent the period and areas of significance, unless otherwise noted.

Statement of Significance Summary Paragraph (Provide a summary paragraph that includes level of significance, applicable criteria, justification for the period of significance, and any applicable criteria considerations.)

The Highland Springs Historic District, located in the eastern part of Henrico County, Virginia, derives its name from its elevated site and several abundant springs within its boundaries. Included within the district are the tracts purchased by Massachusetts resident, Edmund S. Read, in 1890, with the expressed goals of both residing on the newly acquired tract that would provide a healthy environment for his ailing wife, and providing a collection of modest and affordable building lots for the area's families who were seeking home ownership with necessary services nearby. Straddling what became Nine Mile Road (Virginia State Route 33), Highland Springs grew to become a thriving residential community supported by commercial, religious, educational, and recreational resources. Identified as Stop 18, Highland Springs boasted among its primary attraction for new home owners its convenient and affordable accessibility to the City of Richmond via an electric streetcar line. Many of the residents worked in factory and other manufacturing facilities in the City and likely viewed a living environment away from the crowded city as a good choice. The community was laid out in a simple grid plan straddling Nine Mile Road, with several small parks, some of which contained natural springs, scattered throughout the area. The cross streets are arranged alphabetically and named for various species of trees and plants.

The Highland Springs Historic District is eligible at a local level of significance under Criterion C for its collection of well-preserved houses in a variety of vernacular and definable styles dating from the late 19th century to the seventh decade of the 20th century. Sitting on uniform lots of the tree-covered neighborhood, most dwellings are modest in nature and exhibit vernacular forms with restrained architectural detailing. A smaller number of dwellings sit on somewhat larger lots close to Edmund Read's residence or on lots adjacent to Nine Mile Road and display a number of more sophisticated architectural styles such as the Queen Anne, Colonial Revival, and Craftsman. The Minimal Traditional and Ranch styles were widely used in the district after the mid-20th century, with many of the examples almost identical in design.

The Highland Springs Historic District is also eligible under Criterion A in the area of Community Planning and Development as an excellent example of a remarkably intact late-19th-century "streetcar suburb" of the City of Richmond. It contains a large collection of simple one-, one-and-one-half-, and two-story dwellings dating from the late 19th century to the mid- to late 20th century. Ancillary to the dwellings are institutional buildings, commercial structures, churches, schools, a theater, a Masonic Hall, and a post office, all from the same period, and all of which continue to serve the Highland Springs community. The mid-20th century was the period of greatest growth in the district and is reflected in large numbers of surviving dwellings from that period. The district is also locally significant under Criterion A in the area of Social History, as having roots associated with the Temperance Movement and both civic and religious organizations that identified more with Read's New England background than with Richmond and rural Central Virginia. One of the most prominent surviving resources is the 1914 Babcock Masonic Building (043-05413; 043-5334-0024) named for Alexander Gulick Babcock, a leader in the Masonic community and the founder of nearby Masonic Home. Babcock was president of the Richmond City & Seven Pines Railway Company, later the Seven Pines Railway Company that brought the electric streetcar to Highland Springs.⁸ Highland Springs also reflects Read's intention to establish a suburban neighborhood with amenities such as small parks for first-time home owners who wished to escape the unhealthy environment of the city and provide a good life for their families. All deeds to new owners included prohibition of sale to those of African descent, a practice that was common to the great majority of residential developments of the late 19th- and early 20th centuries.⁹ Although transportation, as represented by the important role that the electric streetcar line played in the first 40 years and genesis of Highland Springs, was important, it no longer played a role in the district's history from after the early 1930s. Transportation is not considered an area of significance because no specific resources associated with transportation survive in the district in any recognizable form. The 1938 Henrico Theatre (043-0287; 043-5334-0490) is the only individually-listed resource in the Highland Springs Historic District (listed in 2005).

The Highland Springs Historic District is also notable as being distinctive from other contemporary suburban developments that were platted along streetcar lines in Richmond, most notably Ginter Park. Developed at the same time, Ginter Park was laid out with generous lots that ultimately accommodated many grand mansions and large, sometimes irregular parcels.¹⁰ On the other hand, Highland Springs, although having several fairly large lots and more substantial dwellings near Nine Mile Road, was principally laid out in a strict grid system with very small lots that supported modest and affordable, one- and one-and-a-half-story residences. Highland Park, another contemporary "streetcar suburb" north of Richmond that was laid out on a grid pattern and catered to the middle-class, generally contains larger houses than those found in Highland Springs. Highland Park was also one of several "boomtowns" laid out by local development companies (The Southside Land and Improvement Company, the West End Land Company, and the Northside Land and Improvement Company), and not developed by an individual northerner like at Highland Springs.¹¹

The period of significance for the Highland Springs Historic District begins in 1890, when Read began his purchases of agricultural land for the community in eastern Henrico County, Virginia, and is the date of the first plat illustrating his vision for Highland Springs; and concludes in 1969, with the construction of the current post office, the most recent historic institutional structure in the historic district. Moreover, by 1969 many of the lots in the Highland Springs neighborhood had been built out, although residential construction continued in the community along the established streets well into the 1990s.¹² The resources in Highland Springs Historic District continue to reflect the scale of modest and affordable dwellings built for working class families from the earliest period that largely display locally-produced designs and materials used in simple vernacular styles. The commercial and institutional buildings that continue to support the community are located primarily along Nine Mile Road, and demonstrate larger and more elaborate architectural design. The strict grid plan of the original community also survives intact, and the great majority of roadways, named for trees, flowers, and other plants, are distinguished by a rich collection of specimen trees and other native vegetation.

Narrative Statement of Significance (Provide at least one paragraph for each area of significance.)

HISTORICAL BACKGROUND

The community of Highland Springs, located four and a half miles east of the City of Richmond, occupies one of the most desirable sites in eastern Henrico County, Virginia. Sitting astride a ridge between the Chickahominy and James rivers, the community is the site of several springs that, as early as 1860, was attractive to military units during the Civil War and is the source for its name. The earliest record relating to the spring, known as both the Bonanza and Tucker Spring, was from a Civil War regimental history that states that the springs were used by both Union and Confederate troops during the Battle of Seven Pines in 1862. The parcel with the primary spring is marked as Bonanza Spring on the 1890 plat that shows Read's plan and accompanied the grantee deeds.¹³ Although there are no tangible remains from the Civil War era, a concrete outlet, spring box, and flow control vane (043-5334-1207), located at 251 North Quince Street, likely date to the early 20th century. A road trace of uncertain origin lies adjacent to the area of the spring.¹⁴ As it developed, Highland Springs stands historically alone as an established and built-out suburban community in the eastern part of Henrico County. Most of the desirable areas for residential neighborhoods near Richmond were located north, south, and primarily west of the city. The perception seems always to have been that the western suburbs were most preferred.¹⁵

Fortuitously, a Boston business man, Edmund Sewell Read, whose wife Sophia's health was frail, was searching for a warmer and healthier environment in which to live. The area that became Highland Springs, reportedly located on the highest elevation between the southern city of Richmond and the coast, seemed to offer Read the best place to which to relocate. Read's purchase of about one thousand acres of farmland between 1890 and 1892 was accompanied by preparation of a detailed plat for the forthcoming Highland Springs community (Figures 31-33). The core of his purchase was recorded in 1890; the record notes that it was formerly owned by "Messers Murphy and Babcock." The 1890 plat depicts a strictly gridded plan with primarily small lots and a more limited number of larger lots closer to Nine Mile Road. The plat shows six small parks, some identified as having natural springs, and an area at the northeastern corner marked as "Bonanza Spring: Water Works," with a note that it is "Not Dedicated to Public Use." The parks carried standard names like "Central," "Oakland," and "Laurel," as well as the names "Boston," and "Winthrop," associated with Read's New England roots.¹⁶ A 1895 plat addition to Highland Springs, which contains lots lining Nine Mile Road to the southwest, also included a "Woodlot Reservation" and a small cemetery, but these blocks are outside of the historic district (Figure 34).

The streets in Highland Springs towards which most buildings faced ran northeast to southwest and were named for various species of trees and shrubs. Cross streets that ran parallel to Nine Mile Road were named alphabetically from northwest to southeast. Read posted an advertisement in The Richmond Dispatch in 1891 extolling the virtues of his newly-created community, saying: "Secure a home in Highland Springs, one of the highest, healthiest pleasantest places near Richmond. Take Seven Pines railway at corner of P and Twenty Sixth streets. Five-ride tickets, 25 cents.”¹⁷

The other determining factor in the establishment of Highland Springs was the presence of the Seven Pines Railway. The Commonwealth of Virginia awarded a charter to the Richmond City & Seven Pines Railway Company in 1888.¹⁸ Among the incorporators was the president, A. G. Babcock, who had previously owned the land that straddled the rail line. The destination of the new rail line, which ran along the corridor of Nine Mile Road, was the Seven Pines National Cemetery, which had been established in 1866 for the reinterment of Union dead from the Battle of Seven Pines, also known as the Battle of Fair Oaks Station.¹⁹ The first train on the line ran on April 21, 1889, carrying passengers on excursions to the cemetery. By 1892, Edmund Read, now the owner of the Highland Springs property, had opened up cross streets and had begun to sell lots in the new community. Simultaneously, the railroad owners obtained permission to electrify the line and operate streetcar trolleys instead of using steam powered trains. The train cars became known as “trolleys” because they were connected to an overhead wire called a ‘troller’ that delivered the electricity to power the train.²⁰ The first electric streetcar ran to Highland Springs on March 16, 1893. As an inducement to purchase lots in the community, Read offered a year’s free pass on the streetcar to new property owners. According to a historian writing about rails in Richmond, “[t]he residents of Highland Springs, mindful of the mud and dust on the road, built a high wooden platform about 200 feet next to the track,” to make boarding the train easier. The small, relocated, ca. 1890 frame station building survives as the central, almost indistinguishable, portion of a Craftsman-style house at 5 South Holly Street (043-5735; 043-5334-0137), and is generally considered one of the oldest structures in the community.²¹

Read moved his family to Highland Springs and built a frame house that later was destroyed by fire. In 1896, he built a substantial Tudor-Revival brick mansion at 5 Nine Mile Road in the center of Highland Springs (043-0731; 043-5334-0003). Two interesting notices appeared in the Southern Planter in 1894: one is a news item and the other an advertisement placed by Read. It can be presumed that there may be some exaggeration in the notices, but a close reading of the text provides a good picture of what Highland Springs was like in the mid-1890s.

THE BEAUTIFUL RESIDENCE SUBURB, FOUR MILES FROM RICHMOND, VIRGINIA

It has All Possible Advantages of Climate, Location and Society, while in the Matter of Elevation, Topographical Contour and Good Water, it Offers Attractions that cannot be Withstood.

To the seeker for a home, where it is neither too hot nor too cold, too wet nor too dry; where no violent storms intrude to make life a burden, neither too close to a large city nor too far; where the surroundings and society are all that could be desired, Highland Springs, Henrico, Co., Va., is the place you have been looking for.

This beautiful suburb is one of nature's own town sites – high and dry, gently rolling and sloping toward the Chickahominy river on the north and James river on the south; where nature has supplied abundant water for a large city, in open springs, while the whole surface of the ground is underlaid with a sheet of the purest water, which has many of the qualities of the most celebrated Lithia and is most delightful and cool to the taste.

This little city has been built up entirely within the last two years, without advertising or booming, and now comprises nearly one hundred houses, three stores, and postoffice [sic], public library and assembly room, fire department, saw mill, flour and grist mill, a neat school house and church.

The March 1894 notice goes on to convince the reader that the seller is seeking “people of good character who desire to secure a perfect place of residence, where they can actually enjoy life without being subjected to the rigors of the northern winters...” Assurances are offered that the proprietor “does not seek to make it a manufacturing or commercial center, but a little city of pleasant homes, refined society, and pure enjoyment.” Mr. Read also suggested buyers might be interested in securing some extra land to keep gardens. A subsequent Southern Planter notice, dated July 1894, appears more like a standard advertisement. Beyond the standard verbiage that appeared earlier in the year, Read states:

...In three years this thriving place...has become an important village -- containing fine Block of Stores, Post Office, a fine Church... Public Library of 2,000 volumes, Fire Department with Iron Engine House and Engine, . . . large Steam Mill to provide Building Materials, and two Mills for grinding, and about Fifty Dwellings.

Lots are described as 50 X 120 feet for $50 to $300 depending on their distance from the center of the village and the streetcar line.²²

Between 1892 and 1900, three church congregations located in Highland Springs: Highland Springs Baptist (1892); Highland Springs Methodist (1895); and Highland Springs Unitarian (1900). Only Highland Springs Methodist survives today at 22 North Holly Street in a sanctuary that was completed in 1909 (043-0286; 043-5334-0001). The presence of a Unitarian Church in Virginia was unusual as Unitarians were far more prevalent in the north than in the south; a Unitarian Church in Highland Springs can be attributed to Mr. Read's affiliation.

The large number of social organizations early on in Highland Springs confirms the active nature of the community. Some of the earliest include a Tennis Club, Baseball Club, a Ladies' Aid Society, a Men's Quartet, an Odd Fellows Hall, Literary and Musical Association (later became the Women's Club), and the Women's Christian Temperance Union. This trend continued into the early decades of the 20th century when a Boy Scout troop was formed and two of the Commonwealth's earliest Girl Scout troops gathered in Highlands Springs.²³ The U. S. Census for 1900 provides some interesting data about the residents of the new community. Although most of the residents listed in the area were native Virginians, many hailed from New England, the upper Midwest, other mid-Atlantic states, and a few from abroad. Edmund Read himself is described as a “land lord,” and several other professionals are recorded such as a physician from New York, but the great majority of working residents were skilled laborers or “day laborers.” The number of residents described as “at school” confirms that there was a school within the community. According to a local history prepared in 1990, the first school in Highland Springs was an 1891 one-room frame building that stood on Kalmia and Nine Mile Road. Edmund Read both planned it and paid for its construction. It was succeeded by a larger school building completed in 1907 and expanded in 1908. Sadly, that building burned in 1913, and its 1914 replacement also burned in 1965. The core of the current Highland Springs High School, constructed in 1953, stands outside the district boundaries. The only educational-related resource within the district boundary is the 1916 gymnasium and shop building, which stands vacant at 5 S. Kalmia Avenue (043-5776; 043-5334-0178) and is associated with the 1914 twenty-room brick school that burned in 1965.²⁴

The list of occupations of Highland Springs residents in the 1900 U.S. Census shows that a sizable number were involved in the building trades, such as “house builder,” “brick layer,” “plasterer,” and “house carpenter.” Other occupations included blacksmiths, stone cutters, wheelwright, printers, and shipping clerks. It can be presumed that many of these residents were employed in Richmond and rode the electric trolley daily during the work week.²⁵

The 1901 plan prepared by T. C. Redd and Brothers shows Highland Springs completely platted out as far south as Read Street (Figure 35). Section 8, Edmund Read’s property south of Read Street, was not yet platted into separate lots. Section 6 on the plat shows Read’s oversized lot on which stood the large brick residence that replaced the earlier frame dwelling mentioned earlier. Land abutting the eastern boundary of the community was not platted out by this date, but Read continues to be noted as the owner of property east of Spruce Street.²⁶ The only structure illustrated on Section 8 is a “Steam Mill,” presumably the one Read alluded to in his advertisement. In 1901, Read also still owned large parcels outside of the planned boundaries Highland Springs (Figure 36).

In 1909, the Highland Springs Methodist Church constructed the Gothic Revival-style sanctuary that is still in use today at 22 N. Holly Street (043-0286; 043-5334-0001). This is the earliest institutional building from the first decade of the century that survives in the district. According to a local history, the church, organized in 1895 by a physician named Dr. Granville T. Collins, was originally named the Chickahominy Mission and first met in the Odd Fellows Hall that was located along Nine Mile Road.²⁷

Although it can be assumed that there were originally a number of commercial structures dating from the first years of the 20th century, only two within the district appear to survive today. The two-story, commercial frame building at 16-18 East Nine Mile Road (043-0737; 043-5334-0004) maintains its prominent bracketed parapet and intact storefront. In 1959, it housed a barber shop and Rexall drug store and continues to have a mixed commercial use. The two-story, frame building at 408 West Nine Mile Road (043-5408; 043-5334-0019) was known as Henrick’s Store. In 1959, it housed the Harris Cleaning Company, and today has a store and market.²⁸

The 1910 U. S. Census continues a similar profile of places of birth and employment type of residents with birth places such as Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Michigan, Illinois, and Maine. This would suggest that Edmund Read's marketing of Highland Springs to a far broader geographic audience bore fruit in the early decades. It also suggests that Read's campaign for multiple affordable dwellings provided employment in fields such as plumbing, plastering, carpenter, and brick laying to a sizable number of the residents. The population was virtually all white, with African Americans appearing rarely and then only as "servants." This would comport with Read's restrictive covenants stated in the 1890s deed transfers from Read. In addition to prohibiting sale to persons of African descent, there was also a prohibition on the manufacture and sale of "intoxicating liquors," a mandate that presumably was designed to create a healthy living environment.²⁹ Other occupations listed in the census included a kindergarten teacher, a foreman in a shoe factory, and a machinist in the penitentiary, along with a grocer, and several men working in tobacco factories and paper mills. The census also records Read's son, Frank Read, as a "contracting builder," confirmation that Read's family was active in the Highland Springs community as well.³⁰ Read himself relocated to Washington ca. 1914, but his sons remained in Highland Springs. During the period of World War I, a munitions factory was built in nearby Sandston, and likely would have resulted in more laborers seeking housing. However, not many of the surviving contributing dwellings in the district appear to have been built during that period.

It was during the decade between 1910 and 1920 that one of the iconic institutional buildings in Highland Springs was constructed – The Babcock Lodge No. 322 (043-5413; 043-5334-0024). This Masonic Hall was named in honor of Alexander Gulick Babcock, who had died in 1894. Babcock was responsible for the founding of the Masonic Home (initially an orphanage) located east of Highland Springs on Nine Mile Road and had been the owner of much of the land conveyed to Edmund Read for the community. He was also president of the Seven Pines Railroad Company that had built the streetcar line linking Highland Springs with the City of Richmond. The presence of a Masonic Lodge in the middle of the community is a testament to Read's philosophy of encouraging "good character," citizenship, and service to the community. Free Masonry, dating to the late 18th century and whose members included many of the nation's founding fathers, "is a social organization that promotes charity, esteem, and love for each Brother and their families." Its goals included service to "our country, promotion of peace, and helping others in need."³¹ Read himself was a Past Master of Winthrop Lodge in Massachusetts, and freemasonry's philosophy would have comported with his thinking about the type of community he envisioned for Highland Springs.³² It is not known who designed the two-story, Classically-inspired, brick Masonic Temple that was constructed in 1914. The contractor for the large, two-story, 1965, rear brick addition was H. E. Ferguson at a total cost of $5,760.³³ The first floor of the Masonic building was used for commercial purposes, including housing the Highland Springs Post Office in the space facing Nine Mile Road from 1952 until its move to its current location in 1969.³⁴

The 1920 census is the first time that Highland Springs is mentioned by name as "Highland Springs Village." Occupations of residents remain similar those found in earlier years, with the addition of electricians, telegraphers for Western Union, pipe fitters, and locomotive shop workers. The wide range of working middle-class employment clearly reflects the level of housing that was affordable, and accounts for the modest size of the great majority of the dwellings. By 1920, Edmund Read himself, by then a widower, had relocated to Washington, D.C. Census data shows that the population remained “all white,” through 1940. The 1940 census suggests that most of the dwellings were valued at between $4,000 and $7,000 with monthly rentals averaging $10 to $15 per month.³⁵

During the period between 1920 and World War II, Highland Springs saw the construction of a number of modest houses, and the expansion of commercial and retail operations along Nine Mile Road. The 1920 census reflects many who worked in businesses like drug stores, groceries, barber shops, and machine shops. The places of birth continue to be a number of localities outside Virginia. For the first time, many of Highland Springs’ street names are noted in the census.

Most of those recorded owned their houses and were all white. Workers associated with the building trades, such as carpenters, cabinet makers, plasterers, plumbers, and electricians, continue to dominate the category of “occupations” for the period from 1920-1940. In 1922, Nine Mile Road was paved, and other roadways followed after the cessation of the Seven Pines Electric Trolley in 1933. Bus service began in 1933, even while electric streetcars continued to operate.³⁶

The first Sanborn Maps of the area were drawn in 1921 and updated in 1936. Coupled with later USGS maps of the community, these maps clearly illustrate how the community grew. In 1921, many of the lots remained vacant, with the largest concentration of structures near or fronting Nine Mile Road (Figure 37). By 1934, the lots in Highland Springs were marginally denser, with houses and other improvements (Figure 38). Nearly 200 resources in the Highland Springs Historic District date to the 1930s, but the growth during those 15 years was not as dramatic as what the middle decades of the 20th century would bring.

It was also during the decade of the 1930s that the landmark Henrico Theatre (043-0287; 043-53340490; VLR and NRHP, 2005) was constructed (1936-1938). Designed by architect Edward F. Sinnott, Sr., it is architecturally the most noteworthy and visible building in the district and reflects the position of the Highland Springs community in the eastern portion of Henrico County. Individually listed on the National Register, the air-conditioned auditorium, with what was then state-of-the-art film projection technology, served as a significant entertainment venue for the region and likely defines most of Henrico County’s eastern population’s perception and knowledge of the Highland Springs community.³⁷

Two other religious organizations established congregations in Highland Springs during the period between the World Wars: the Roman Catholics and the Episcopalians. The original sanctuary for present-day Trinity Episcopal Church (043-5414; 043-5334-0025), located in the 500 block of West Nine Mile Road, dated to 1922 when the congregation was known as Church of the Messiah. It was replaced by the present building in 1967. The Episcopal Church Sunday school building from 1954 still stands on South Cedar Street. The Catholic chapel today is located outside the boundaries of the historic district. The presence of a large Catholic community that called for a Catholic church makes Highland Springs more like a New England village than a Virginia one. The tradition of having many denominations that served the Highland Springs community continues today with many recent religious organizations occupying retail storefronts along Nine Mile Road.

Today, there are only a handful of vacant lots, confirming the enormous building campaign after World War Two and continuing into the closing decades of the 20th century.

The largest numbers of buildings in Highland Springs (30%) were constructed in the two decades following World War II when demand for housing was tremendous throughout the entire nation (Figure 39). Architectural evidence strongly suggests that there were several developer/builders dominating the building scene in Highland Springs in the 1940s and 1950s, as many of the modest one-story, three-bay gable-roofed Minimal Traditional houses are almost identical in design.³⁸ There was far more affordable land in this area, east of the city of Richmond, and it was a fertile location for potential home owners of more modest means. One structure that represents the ongoing growth of the residential community is the large county water tower, erected ca. 1950, that still functions at 100 North Daisy Avenue (043-5489; 043-5334-0083). In the early 1940s, local residents came together to organize a Highland Springs fire company.³⁹ The fire station building, located at 908 East Nine Mile Road (043-5394; 043-5334-0005), was constructed ca. 1956 and later abandoned when a larger more modern one was more recently constructed along the western end of Nine Mile Road.

Because of its location on one of the primary east-west automobile routes between the eastern reaches of Henrico County and the City of Richmond (Nine Mile Road - Virginia State Route 33), Highland Springs was also the site of numerous automobile service repair shops, gas stations, and car dealerships.

Two notably good examples of automobile dealerships are the 1950 former Hechler Motors Chevrolet Dealership at 6 West Nine Mile Road (043-5403; 043-5334-0014), and the 1952 Modernist-inspired building at 601 East Nine Mile Road (043-5396; 043-5334-0007). Gas stations include the 1963 Colonial Revival-style, hip-roofed brick building at 100 West Nine Mile Road (043-5404; 043-5334-0015); the Modernist 1956 former Green's Esso Service Station at 200 West Nine Mile Road (043-5407; 043-5334-0018); and the Contemporary 1957 former Williams Motor Company at 301 East Nine Mile Road (043-5412; 043-5334-0023).

The 1959 Suburban Directory (the first comprehensive directory that captures information on suburban communities in the Richmond area) confirms the important position of the automobile in the mid-20th-century development of Highland Springs. Western Auto, Gammon R. A. Gas Service Station, O'Connell's Service Station, Roy Satko Motor Company Auto Repairs, Hechler Motor Car Company (new and used), Crown Service Station, T. C. Williams Motor Company, Highland Auto Parts, Williford Esso Servicenter, and Fair Oaks Motor Sales stood along the commercial Nine Mile Road corridor in the heart of Highland Springs during the 1959-1960 period.⁴⁰ Other commercial ventures listed in the City Directory that were located along Nine Mile Road include First Federal Savings and Loan Association; McChesney's Hardware Store;

Highland Springs Historic District

Hawthorne Dry Cleaning and Laundry (still in operation at the same location today); Haynes Lumber Company, multiple barbers shops and beauty salons; furniture stores; insurance companies; and several department stores.⁴¹ Since then, auto dealerships have moved to more spacious land parcels outside the community and many of the former commercial buildings are occupied by other commercial enterprises or in some cases, evangelical religious organizations. Current examples include the New Life Baptist Church, located in a one-story, 1949, brick commercial building at 20 Nine Mile Road East (043-5397; 043-5334-0008) and the Impact Church housed in the 1948 Modernist building at 6 East Nine Mile Road (043-5401; 043-5334-0012).

Commercial and residential growth continued in Highland Springs in the 1960s, with nearly 14% of the resources in the community built during that decade. Thirteen commercial buildings along Nine Mile Road date from the 1960s, including the 1969 Highland Springs Post Office (043-5469; 043-5334-0063). Residential construction of the 1960s was generally of the Ranch style, but also reflected the continued use of the Minimal Ranch form due to the narrow size of the lots along most of the streets in Highland Springs.

The Highland Springs Historic District is significant locally under Criterion C in the area of Architecture in its representation of a community that was platted in 1890 and modestly grew during its first few decades. Although Highland Springs was created during the late 19th century, its architecture reflects its appearance during the mid-20th century. The majority of the buildings are single-family dwellings, with fewer than ten examples of duplexes. Commercial buildings are centered on Nine Mile Road. Most of Highland Springs' oldest structures are located along Nine Mile Road and on the side streets on lots closest to it. The most popular architectural style found in the district is the Minimal Traditional, with the majority being constructed in the 1950s. The second most used architectural style in the district is the Ranch, from the 1960s. Dwellings continued to be built in Highland Springs during the 1970s and 1980s. A primary builder was Cliff Groome, who designed for himself and other builders, simple, one-story, gable-roofed, rectangular dwellings that would fit on the small Highland Springs lots and also be affordable. These were generally three-bedroom, one-bath dwellings on 50-foot wide lots that Groome first marketed in the $11,000- $12,000 range.⁴²

While the district contains some excellent examples of the Tudor Revival, Queen Anne, Italianate, Colonial Revival, and Craftsman styles, the majority of buildings are vernacular in nature (Figure 40). The most architecturally sophisticated building in the district is the individually-listed Henrico Theatre (043-0287; 043-5334-0490), designed by architect Edward F. Sinnott, Sr. and built in 1938.

The community of Highland Springs has evolved over the past 130 years from a carefully planned community that met the ideals of its founder, and that offered services and a convenient transportation system to its residents. The community was and continues to be dominated by a large collection of dwellings, the majority of which sit on small lots and are modest in character. Until the 1960s the population was almost exclusively white with all-white schools and all white religious organizations. And although linked to Richmond by an electric streetcar line, the identity of Highland Springs has never been directly intertwined or challenged with the late 20th-century urban experience. It was a product of its time, when populations were moving away from the cities and seeking a healthier and rural residential life distant from what in the late 19th century was considered a less than optimal place to raise a family. Over its long history, Highland Springs has offered a community of churches, schools, sports and social organizations accompanied by affordable and modest housing in a tree-covered environment. It took advantage of mechanized transportation that allowed its early residents a way to work in urban factories and live in a rural small-town setting. Today it represents an anomaly in the midst of high priced suburban real estate developments and interstate highways.

Verbal Boundary Description

The nominated boundaries of the Highland Springs Historic District are included within a general polygon whose vertices are marked by the above listed location coordinates. The true and correct boundaries are also shown on the accompanying Sketch Map, which was prepared by Commonwealth Heritage Group.

Boundary Justification

The boundaries of the Highland Springs Historic District were drawn generally to follow the boundaries of the original 1890 Highland Springs subdivision with a portion of the 1895 amendment. The boundaries include the largest concentration of contributing resources that represent the evolution of the Highland Springs neighborhood from 1890 to 1969, as well as the district's historic setting.
