Arizona Hotel Pima County, Arizona

NARRATIVE DESCRIPTION

The Arizona Hotel is an end-row, two-story, building with a basement, retail space on the ground floor and a former hotel, now Section 8 apartments, on the second floor. The slightly trapezoidal property is bounded by Sixth Avenue on the east, a 20' alley to the south (10th Street), a Scott Street-facing property on the west and an adjacent Sixth Avenue property on the north. The basement occupies the entire footprint of the building and according to a 1939 property record card contains four rooms, equal to the number of structural bays on the floors above. According to the current property manager, the basement is used principally by the northernmost tenant which has traditionally been a restaurant. Although the ground floor is divided into four structural bays, it houses five retail spaces that have been leased to dozens of tenants since 1917, the most notable being the Wells Fargo Company. As seen in the floor plan, Store #1 is the smallest space (330 sq. ft.) and is carved out of the structural bay of Store #2. The current occupant of Store #2 and #3 that appears to be part of the original construction, but has since been bricked in. Each retail space ranges in area from approximately 2000 to 2500 sq. ft and has a street façade facing east (6th Avenue) from which a recessed entry is carved out. Each entry space has a slightly different configuration, but generally is splayed to attract passersby to look at the storefront windows without blocking the entrance. The original interiors had 12' tall ceilings clad in tin pressed tin, some of which are still present.

In addition to the retail spaces, the ground floor has a stairway entrance to the second floor that is carved out of the structural bay of Store #4. The second floor is accessed through wood-framed double leaf entry doors with a transom and a marble staircase. Currently, the former residential hotel is composed of a lobby, 23 rooms and 10 bathrooms; the original hotel contained 36 rooms and six bathrooms. Although no information could be found on the original configuration of rooms, the property manager indicated that the second floor lobby was once much larger and was defined as an "atrium" that has since been roofed over. The original hotel also had a screened sleeping porch protruding almost 12 feet on the west façade of the second floor which was removed in approximately 1990 (Brown).

The principal facade faces east and Sixth Avenue, and is composed in a restrained Neoclassical Revival style. The four-bay structural bay composition of the ground floor facade is transformed to a three-bay composition of the second story façade, with the central bay of the second story resting above the middle bays of the ground floor. The ground floor facade contains a series of storefront bays with recessed entries all glazed with plate glass framed with terracotta tile. Each of the storefronts and the hotel entrance have protruding fabric awnings that have been added in the last five years. The dominant second floor facade is symmetrical in design with three bays defined by decorative pilasters that extend to the ground and pediment centered on each bay. The wide central bay is marked by a single window in the center of the façade over the hotel entry and was once accentuated by a sheet metal and neon marguee with the name "Arizona Hotel". The single, central window is balanced by two sets of window ensembles, each with a paired window flanked by single windows. The central bay is also accentuated by its decorative features, including molded surrounds above the windows with ornamental keystone detail on the central and flanking window ensembles. Above the central window is the building name plate with a raised molding and letters spelling "The Arizona". Above each of the central bay window ensembles is a decorative swag. The secondary bays, at either end of the facade, are each defined by another window ensemble. These windows are accentuated by painted keystones above each of the ensemble's windows. The windows in the central bay have cast concrete sills while those of the secondary bays have corbelled sills. The top of the building is marked by a stepped parapet with a cap row and four cast concrete capped pilasters. Applied to each of the pilasters is a cast decorative detail at the level of the top of the second story windows.

The south and west (rear) facades are painted brick with fenestration restricted primarily to the second floor composed of single windows topped with shallow segmented arches and corbelled brick sills. All the windows in the building are wood-framed with double hung sashes. New fixed pane windows have been added to the side façade that although small in size are not similar to the original windows in their shape. The rear facade, viewable from a vehicular access at the rear of the building but shrouded by trees, has been modified to accommodate steel fire exit stairways. Four of the five ground floor tenants have doors and windows opening to the rear access of the property, however all of them have been modified to accommodate contemporary security or mechanical needs. There are also three basement access wells constructed of reinforced concrete and ashlar stone; the southern rear basement entrance is hidden by a contemporary structure over the entrance well. Single unit, double-hung windows line the entire second floor except for the northernmost dwelling unit (the manager's residence) which is an ensemble of two double-hung windows. The fire exits utilized existing window openings by enlarging them and attaching a platform between the exit door and fire staircase. A flashing detail that marked the attachment of the original sleeping porch to the building still remains; otherwise there is no evidence of the former sleeping porch. Above this molding are a series of vents marking the air space between the second floor ceiling and building roof. The rear roof is defined by parapet wall with no decorative elements. The north facade sits directly on the property line abutting the building to the north of the nominated property.

The building's foundation and basement walls are constructed of ashlar stone exposed in the basement, double brick walls reinforced with exterior pilasters on the east façade and interior pilasters on the other facades on the ground and second floors. The street façade is plastered; the other facades are painted brick. The floors on the first floor are concrete with some entries accented by terrazzo and others with prismatic glass to provide light to the basement below. The second story floor is constructed of wood that has been covered with a linoleum-like surface.

The building maintains much of its architectural integrity. Throughout its history, the ground floor retail space has undergone various tenant improvements, including minor modifications to the façade, but nothing that violates the fundamental integrity of the stylistic nor the typological characteristics. Recent painting (maroon and gray) has accentuated the decorative features of the east façade in a manner probably not consistent with the original, more monochromatic, façade. Also the recent addition of matching "quarter-round" canvas awnings is inconsistent with the building's original character, but awnings of some variety were probably always present. The original tin ceilings are exposed in only one of the retail stores, but it is possible that the other tin ceilings are hidden behind the plastered ceilings in the other retail spaces.

NARRATIVE STATEMENT OF SIGNFICANCE

The Arizona Hotel is eligible under both Criterion A, as an extant example of a two-part commercial block hotel building, related to the context of Planning and Development of Downtown Tucson. Under Criterion C, the Arizona Hotel is significant for its Late 19th and Early 20th Century Neodassical Revival influences related to the context of Architecture in Downtown Tucson. The period of the building's significance begins with the date of its construction, 1917, during the third period of Tucson's central business district development (1896-1935) and continues through the fourth period of downtown development (1935-1970) to the current time period.

The history of Arizona Hotel is obscure. A bargain and sale deed, dated 1914, granted the land on which the Arizona Hotel now occupies to Luke G. Radulovich. Radulovich, referred to in the city directories of that time as a "capitalist", is more renown in Tucson's downtown development for the Radulovich Block (now demolished), a prominent two-part commercial block at the northeast corner of Stone and Congress where he had a thriving business, "L.G. Radulovich & Co. Sanitary Plumbing, Crockery & Glassware". Radulovich arrived in Tucson "sometime before the turn of the (20^{th)} century" when he built up his business in a very short time. Newspaper accounts indicate that in 1890, W.A. Julian, a competitor in Tucson's plumbing business, bought out Radulovich for $25,000, and his newly merged business, W.A. Julian Company, dominated 85% of all plumbing, heating and roofing business in Tucson (W.A. Julian..., 1928). By 1906, Radulovich and his family had moved to Austria "after having made a small fortune here", but returned in 1908 to invest as a partner in, and later president of, the Tucson Owl Drug Company, which eventually became one of Tucson's prominent drugstores. By 1917, he is listed as "retired" and beginning in 1918 his city directory entry is associated with the Arizona Hotel. Radulovich does not appear again in any references until his death in 1921.

No information exists on the architect of this building, but it is clearly designed by someone versed in the popular commercial styles of that time. Neoclassical Revival elements such the division of the overall symettrical façade into individually symmetrical bays, the triangular pediment, window ensembles with molded surrounds, and decorative pilasters.
