DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

This brick house was begun in 1838 by Nathan Vaught, a master-builder in Maury county. It has been used as a residence continually and has undergone little alteration.

The main portion of the house is two stories with one story sections on either side. The one story sections are topped with a castellated brick wall. The house has seven chimneys rising above its roofline.

The rectangular form of the house is approximately 60 feet by 50 feet. The two-story front porch is recessed with wood trim which gives a further feel of the Gothic influence. The wood trim through its shape creates a lancet effect. Ornate brickwork forms a parapet above the porch giving a solid form to the central portion. A slight brick buttress projects from each corner of the house.

A one-story porch has been added around the rear and two sides of the house. Outside stairs originally led from the rear porch to the one large room above. Later the rear porch was enclosed to serve as a kitchen.

The house has been painted white in more recent years. The front doors, both up and down stairs, are in the Greek Revival style with interesting side light panels.

Behind the main house and on the grounds are a small cottage and a carriage house. The house has many furnishings from its early owners still intact and has been uninhabited recently as its owner just expired after several years in a nursing home. Thus the house has received little maintenance in recent years.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

NATIONAL REGISTER

This house was built in Columbia for Samuel Polk Walker, nephew of President James K. Polk. Shortly after it was built, it was bought by the Rev. Franklin Gillette Smith, the head of the Columbia Institute for girls. In 1852 Smith left the Institute and founded on adjoining property, the Athenaeum, a competing girls' school. The rectory then became a part of the Athenaeum property and remained so until around 1900 when most of the Athenaeum buildings (since demolished) were taken over by the public school system. The rectory then became the private residence of Miss Carrie Smith a descendant of the original rector. The house has carried the name "Athenaeum" since that time.

The Athenaeum, the last remaining structure of a 22 acre campus with more than 8 important buildings is significant as it represents one of the many old and well-established private schools that existed in the Columbia area, as well as the state. Founded in 1852, the school was by 1858 granted a charter by the State giving it full university powers. "To be rather than to seem" was the motto of the school that instructed more than 10,000 young ladies in its long history. On the campus was a fine Doric structure that served as the main building, a gymnasium, rotunda, pavilion and a library that contained over 10,000 volumes. In 1892 the school had over $4,000 worth of scientific apparatus, a large museum of natural history specimens, and a fine art collection.

The rectory itself, built by Columbia's most important builder prior to the Civil War, is representative of the revival period of architecture where many influences were felt in building. The Gothic influence is definitely noted in this structure and the front porch gives a feeling of the Moorish influence found in some buildings in the revival period in America. It is the only structure of its type in the state and stands on an impressive lot near the downtown area of Columbia. It has been noted and highly by any students of architecture.
