III. Physical description of property and historical significance

Arlington House overlooks Lake Providence behind a broad sloping lawn. The property includes the plantation house, a cistern surmounted by a gazebo, a frame garage, an old buggy shed, and a twentieth century frame cottage.

The house is significant for its six-bay, two-story, Doric gallery which has fluted columns on the upper story. It is also noteworthy for its handsome leaded fanlight and sidelights at each end of the central hall and for its elaborate interior paneling. The balustrade and the interior staircase date from the late nineteenth century. It is regionally significant in the area of architecture as one of about four two-story, galleried, Greek Revival mansions in northeastern Louisiana.

The house also has important historical associations with Edward Sparrow, an immensely wealthy cotton planter and Confederate politician. See statement of significance on National Register form for additional information.
