Describe the present and original (if known) physical appearance

The White Horse Pike Residential District is located in the eastern portion of the Borough of Haddon Heights. It contains some 143 properties, of which only 22 are non-contributing (see list below). Of the contributing buildings in the district, nearly all were constructed in the years between c. 1890 and c. 1915; in addition, a small number of buildings which predate or postdate the district's primary period of significance by only a few years are also considered to be contributing (see boundary justification). With only a few exceptions, the buildings in the district are in good to excellent condition and remain on their original sites.

The spine of the district is the White Horse Pike, laid out in 1801 and originally known as Camden Long-a-Coming Road. Just to the west of the district is the right-of-way of the railroad; established in the 1870s as the Philadelphia and Atlantic City Railroad (now the Pennsylvania and Reading Seashore Lines) and double-tracked in 1890, this line played an important role in the development of Haddon Heights from a rural community to a residential suburb. Together the White Horse Pike and the railroad give a strong north-south axis to the historic district. At its greatest extent, along White Horse Pike, the district runs from the northern boundary of the borough at Kings Highway to Haddon Street on the south. The other major north-south streets in the district are Fourth Avenue (to the east of White Horse Pike) and East Atlantic Avenue (west of the Pike). The east-west cross streets within the district are Green, Station Avenue, Garden, and High.

The developers of Haddon Heights deliberately emphasized spacious, suburban qualities in their plans for the town, and this is clearly reflected in the broad, tree-lined streets of the White Horse Pike Residential District. The Pike and Fourth Avenue are each 70 feet wide, East Atlantic Avenue 42 feet wide. The cross streets are 50 feet wide. Development began at the northern end of the district about 1895 and gradually spread south. All of the original building lots are oriented toward the north-south streets and have a uniform depth of 200 feet. The lots at the northern end of the district have a standard width of 100 feet; at the center and southern end of the district, lots are generally narrower, ranging from 75 to 50 feet wide. For the most part, buildings are set back behind deep lawns and have spacious rear yards as well. In its description of Haddon Heights, the New Jersey volume of the American Guide Series, published in 1939, noted the community's "wide, well-paved streets, fine old trees, and uncrowded lawns and gardens." In general, lawns and mature plant materials, and in particular the trees along the curbs of White Horse Pike and the other north-south streets, remain significant factors in the visual character of the district.

Statement of Significance (in one paragraph)

The White Horse Pike Historic District encompasses the heart of the eastern residential section of Haddon Heights. It is a good example of the bedroom commuting suburbs developed from the 1890s through about 1915 in the Philadelphia-Camden area. Its location along railroad tracks and major arteries graphically documents the importance of transportation improvements to the development of the twentieth-century suburb. Haddon Heights was planned and built to attract middle-class families from Camden and Philadelphia. It remains distinctive for its broad avenues, large lots, green lawns, and its variety of late-Victorian and early twentieth-century detached houses.

Historical Background:

Camden County east of the city of Camden remained rural from its initial settlement through the late nineteenth century. The locale that became Haddon Heights was first settled at the close of the seventeenth century by families who came from Flushing, New York. They included the families of John Hinchman, John Glover, and John Thorne, who bought farms fronting along the King's Highway, a major seventeenth-century road that linked the Delaware River towns of Salem, Gloucester City, and Burlington.

In 1801, the White Horse Pike was constructed, linking the town of Camden with a hamlet called Long-A-Coming (now Berlin) several miles to the southeast. Five years later Clement's Bridge Road (now the southern boundary of the Borough of Haddon Heights) was built. In 1807, Nathaniel Lippincott bought much of the Hinchman farm, and from it established farms for his sons. Benjamin Lippincott, one of Nathaniel's descendants, later took an active role in promoting the village of Haddon Heights.

From the 1830s through the 1860s, the civil jurisdiction of the area changed several times. Throughout the colonial period and into the twentieth century, the site of Haddon Heights was split between two townships, Gloucester and Newton. The line between them ran in an easterly direction, crossing the White Horse Pike about midway between the King's Highway and Clement's Bridge Road. In 1831, the area south of this line was ceded to Union Township. In 1855, it became part of Centre Township, which was created from a part of Union. The land north of the township boundary became part of Haddon Township when Newton Township was divided in 1865. County jurisdiction changed in 1844, when Camden County was created from the northern half of Gloucester County.

variety of architectural styles and forms popular in the late 19th and early 20th century. Colonial Revival is the predominant style in the district, but there are also a substantial number of American Four Square buildings, many with either Colonial Revival or Prairie decorative elements. The district also contains representative examples of Queen Anne, Dutch Colonial Revival, Tudor Revival, Craftsman and Bungalow. Although stylistic examples are scattered throughout the district, earlier examples tend to be located to the north, later ones to the south. An important element in the overall suburban quality of the district is the fact that, regardless of architectural style, almost every building in the district has either a front, side, or wrap-around porch. Many of the houses also have detached garages, reflecting the role of the automobile in the creation of the residential suburb.

Of the extant contributing buildings in the district, only one was originally built for non-residential use. That exception, St. Mary's Episcopal Church, stands at the northwest corner of White Horse Pike and Garden Street. As completed in 1910, it was a frame structure sheathed with wood shingles. Additions were made to the building in 1936 and again in 1953, when it was also faced with brick. Despite these alterations, the building still suggests the scale and massing of an early 20th century church. The original rectory, built in 1912, has been moved a short distance and now stands at the rear of the church lot, facing East Atlantic Street.

Stylistic Examples (note that additional representatives of each style may be found in the inventory forms that accompany this nomination):

Queen Anne: Only a few examples of Queen Anne architecture occur in the district. All have typical features of the style, including asymmetrical and complex forms, multiple facade materials, towers or turrets, and relatively elaborate trim. The most significant Queen Anne house, located at 105 Fourth Avenue, was constructed c. 1879 and so pre-dates the major growth of the district by several years. This 2 1/2-story brick building with stucco bay has a number of notable stylistic features including an open corner porch, a front bay with decorative panels, a turret with high conical roof and finial, and a cross-gabled roof.

The 3-story house at 101 Fourth Avenue, built c. 1880, also displays a high-style Queen Anne design, here with wrap-around porch with columns set on piers, square tower, and gabled dormers with finials. The first floor retains its facing of uncoursed stone, but synthetic siding has been applied to the upper stories.

A third example of Queen Anne stands at 116 White Horse Pike. This 2 1/2-story house, built c. 1900 in a combination of stone and wood shingle, has such typical stylistic elements as a wrap-around porch (partially enclosed) and gabled dormers, but also displays a transition to the Colonial Revival style in such features as a palladian window.

Colonial Revival: Overall, the Colonial Revival is the predominant form in the district, either in high-style examples or as a decorative envelope applied to American Four Square houses. Representative buildings are found throughout the district and range in date from c. 1900 to c. 1925. These buildings have symmetrical facades, hipped or gabled roofs with dormers, front or wrap-around porches supported on columns (either full-length or set on plinths), and classical details such as pedimented doorways and gables or palladian windows. The majority of examples in the district were originally sheathed with clapboard, but an interesting example at 102 Fourth Avenue (c. 1905) is faced with stone. Another interesting variant appears in the house at 106 White Horse Pike (c. 1920). Although the building is essentially a 2-story, 3-bay-wide Colonial Revival box, some of the architectural details applied to it give the house a Spanish Colonial flavor. These features include the ridge tiles on the hipped roof and the hipped dormers; carved brackets set in pairs under the wide eaves; and viga-like projections on the low parapets atop the entrance porch and side porch.

Other representative Colonial Revival houses in the district include the following:

304 White Horse Pike - c. 1900; 2 1/2-story; wrap-around porch with Doric columns, pedimented gables, palladian window;

209 East Atlantic - 1903; 2 1/2-story; wrap-around porch, pedimented gables, palladian window;

305 East Atlantic - 1907; 2 1/2-story; front porch with pediment, intersecting gables;

109 Fourth Avenue - c. 1907; 2 1/2-story; wrap-around porch with paired colonnettes on stone plinths, gabled dormers;

111 Fourth Avenue - 1907; 2 1/2-story; wrap-around porch with Doric columns, gabled dormers;

125 Fourth Avenue - c. 1909; 2 1/2-story; wrap-around porch, pedimented gable with palladian window;

129 Fourth Avenue - c. 1907; 2 1/2-story; front porch with paired columns, modified palladian window, pedimented dormers.

Dutch Colonial: The district contains only a few examples of the Dutch Colonial style, most of which are identified primarily by the use of the gambrel roof form. By far the best of them is the house at 105 White Horse Pike. Built c. 1910, this 2 1/2-story building has a first floor of stone with clapboard sheathing above; it features a wrap-around porch with stone piers, bay and oriel windows, an intersecting gambrel roof, and gambrel and gable dormers. Simpler examples of the Dutch Colonial appear at 120 Fourth Avenue (c. 1920) and 429 White Horse Pike (1915). Both of the latter have shed-roofed front dormers and exterior end chimneys; 429 also features an enclosed, wrap-around porch..

Tudor Revival: Although several houses in the district have elements of Tudor Revival in their design (among them 2 White Horse Pike, built c. 1900, and 101 White Horse Pike, built c. 1905), the most fully developed examples of the style are the three semi-detached houses at 215-17, 219-21, and 223-25 East Atlantic Avenue, dating from the early 1920s. Each is 2 1/2 stories, covered with stucco with half timber trim, and carries a gabled roof with large intersecting front gable. All of the houses have enclosed front porches and multilight windows. One of the six units has been substantially altered but the others are virtually intact.

Bungalow and American Four Square: The bungalow and the American Four Square were an early 20th century response to the desire for smaller, more practical homes. Both of these forms were mass-produced and plans for them or the components of the houses themselves could be readily ordered from a variety of sources such as Montgomery Ward, The Aladdin Company, and Gordon-Van Tine Company. In addition, individual builders' companies and contractors offered designs for houses that would use their products and services. The basic forms of the buildings could be individualized by stylistic detailing including Colonial Revival, Craftsman, and Prairie elements.

Bungalow and American Four Square houses tend to be concentrated toward the southern end of the White Horse Pike Residential District, though some examples appear to the north as well. Notable examples of the Craftsman Bungalow occur at 105 East Atlantic Avenue (1914), 211 White Horse Pike (c. 1910), 305 White Horse Pike (c. 1905), and 408 White Horse Pike (c. 1910). Examples of the American Four Square in the district are most often decorated with an eclectic combination of Colonial Revival and Prairie stylistic elements. Representative houses of this type include 321 East Atlantic (1914), 215 White Horse Pike (c. 1910), 316 White Horse Pike (1907), 213 Fourth Avenue (1911), 307 Fourth Avenue (1908), and 310 Fourth Avenue (c. 1908).

Integrity

With the exception of the buildings listed below as non-contributing, the overall level of integrity in the White Horse Pike Residential District is quite good. Among the altered buildings, the most common change is the addition of synthetic siding and/or metal storm windows and doors. In none of those cases, has the degree of alteration been sufficient to destroy the historic character of the house, and all of them continue to contribute to the district.

A number of buildings in the district have been converted from residential to commercial use, particularly along the White Horse Pike itself. In general, the conversion has been accomplished without substantial exterior alteration and only signs mounted on the lawns or on the houses themselves identify those that have become commercial. The small number of houses with substantial alterations include 9 and 10 White Horse Pike and 313 Fourth Avenue, all of which have first floor office additions, and even these buildings retain enough of their original appearance to allow them to contribute to the significance of the district.

The White Horse Pike Residential District contains only two examples of alteration that has destroyed historic integrity (see Block 26, Lot 14, and Block 36, Lots 1 and 2, described below). The other 20 non-contributing buildings within the district are all new construction. Of the total 22, 7 are houses, 5 are apartment buildings, and the remaining 10 serve various commercial purposes. Because White Horse Pike is a major traffic artery, it has attracted new construction as well as commercial conversions. Although 17 of the non-contributing buildings are found along the Pike, more than half of the contributing buildings in the district are also located here, and the scattered new construction has not destroyed the unity of the historic streetscape.

Non-contributing Buildings

The following properties (block and lot numbers refer to the accompanying tax map) have been included in the boundaries of the White Horse Pike Residential District because of their location but do not contribute to the National Register significance:

The genesis of the modern Borough of Haddon Heights occurred during the 1870s, when the Philadelphia and Atlantic City Railroad completed its line to the New Jersey shore. Its track was parallel to and west of the White Horse Pike. Benjamin Lippincott, who owned a sizeable farm that was crossed by the right-of-way, built a railroad station in 1876. This station promoted interest in the location as a residential area. In 1889, the Reading Railroad absorbed the Philadelphia and Atlantic City along with several other lines, and during the upgrading that followed, the line was double-tracked in 1890.

Benjamin A. Lippincott, who later became the town's first postmaster and mayor, initiated the community's development about 1890. He filed a subdivision map for a community that he proposed to call "Prospect Ridge." His plan called for two broad avenues, East Atlantic and West Atlantic, running parallel to and either side of the railroad. Station Avenue, at a right angle to the railroad, would become the major east-west axis through the town. The original station is shown on the plan at the northwest corner of West Atlantic and Station Avenues. Two lesser crosstown avenues, Green and Garden, would run parallel to Station Avenue. To the east of the railroad, Lippincott envisaged five residential avenues numbered First through Fifth, running parallel to the railroad. Two additional avenues, Seventh and Eighth, paralleled the railroad to the west. The White Horse Pike was designated Fifth Avenue. The King's Highway, which occupied the northerly edge of the subdivision, was designated Main Street. Thus, all of the land in the White Horse Pike Residential District north of Garden Street would have been included in Lippincott's projected community.

About the same time Lippincott proposed Prospect Ridge, he sold much of his land to Charles H. Hillman, the builder who evidently installed the streets called for under the Prospect Ridge plan. Hillman, however, a member of one of Haddonfield's oldest families, suggested that the community be named Haddon Heights. Although Hillman built few houses before 1895, development accelerated before the end of the decade. Within the district, some of the houses that Hillman built were located along East Atlantic and Fourth Avenues. They are chiefly in the Queen Anne style, and they occupy some of the widest lots in the subdivision. The best evidence of Haddon Heights' growth in these years, however, is the rapid increase of its commercial enterprises, community organizations and civic institutions. The Evaul family opened the community's first grocery store at the corner of Station Avenue and the White Horse Pike in 1898. Other stores soon followed. The Haddon Heights Baptist Church and the St. Rose of Lima Roman Catholic Church were organized about 1900. The population that year reached 350. The First Presbyterian Church and the public library were organized in 1902. The first trolley made its appearance in 1903.

In 1904, the Borough of Haddon Heights was incorporated by the New Jersey legislature. Its incorporation removed the old township boundary line that had split the community. The borough extended from King's Highway on the north to Clements Bridge Road on the south, and from east of First Avenue to west of Tenth Avenue. That year, the first public school was opened, the first local newspaper was begun, and the local fire company was organized. In addition, four community residents, Clemens Titzck, Frank B. Jess, Harold Rogers, and Charles Bunting, formed the Haddon Heights Real Estate Company. By 1907, this company acquired all of the remaining undeveloped land in the borough east of the railroad. Land south of Garden Street was subdivided. The north-south avenues, First through East Atlantic, were extended to Clements Bridge Road. While the company retained in its new building lots the 200-foot depth that had become standard through the Prospect Ridge subdivision, it varied the width of its lots to suit the needs of a wide variety of buyers. Lots varied from a maximum of 100 feet wide adjacent to Garden Avenue, to a minimum of 45 feet wide near Clements Bridge Road.

The Haddon Heights Real Estate Company emphasized its willingness to build homes tailored to the needs and tastes of the purchaser. Prices were moderate, ranging at first between $3,000 and $5,000. These prices permitted Haddon Heights to attract middle class families from the city. Although some houses after 1920 cost more than $6,000 due to a general increase in prices, these houses were still affordable by the middle class.

The architecture of the district reflects the popular styles that prevailed in the United States from the 1890s through the 1920s. There was a succession of styles, which to some extent incorporated simplification of detailing and the standardization of exterior forms that were major trends in housing throughout the country during the first quarter of the 20th century. Each step resulted in reduction of the amount of applied exterior detail. The Queen Anne houses of the 1890s were followed between about 1900 and 1907 by Colonial Revival houses with vestigial traces of Queen Anne detailing. Toward the end of the first decade and into the second, new houses in the district exhibited an evolution within Colonial Revivalism away from Queen Anne vestiges toward the American Foursquare style, in which the facade was flattened and irregularities of plan reduced, and fenestration regularized. Occasional influences of the Craftsman style can be seen. Bungalows also became popular. Consisting of only a story-and-a-half, these houses embodied a further reduction of cost and maintenance requirements from their two-story predecessors. In addition, most of the bungalows in the district were built on the smaller lots. Such houses were easier to keep clean than Victorian houses had been. While the large houses of the 1890s probably were designed to facilitate the work of servants, the later, smaller houses were built for families without servants. In these families, the wife was responsible for maintaining a clean home. In the 1920s, a somewhat different form of Colonial Revival became popular, including the central hall house, and the Dutch Colonial with gambrel roof. These tend to be more capacious than the bungalows.

In addition to middle-class housing, Haddon Heights provided the cultural and civic amenities and the social environment that middle-class families wanted. The Haddon Heights Real Estate Company extensively advertised the community's "high altitude, natural drainage, convenient location, transportation facilities, free circulating public library, good stores, churches, and schools, pleasing social life of 1,500 residents...and fully-equipped fire departments."(1) Other local boosters concurred. According to another real estate agency, Haddon Heights was the finest residential area between Camden and Atlantic City. Social homogeneity may have been a further attraction. Haddon Heights also possessed a "100 percent English-reading population of the kind of people you like to know."(2) A school paper adopted the motto: "Haddon Heights: Homes, Health, Happiness."(3)

Implicit in this motto was a strong desire for public healthfulness, sanitation, and cleanliness. The lofty topography of the town, its wide and well shaded lawns, and its spacious streets appealed to middle-class urbanites who were unable to afford as much space or the same quality of housing within the city limits of Camden or Philadelphia. Haddon Heights was described as enjoying "all the seclusion of a much more remote suburban town coupled with the city conveniences of the metropolitan region embracing it."(4) The town also boasted fine public sanitation systems. Its water and sewer systems were among the most advanced in New Jersey. The sewage treatment plant (outside the district) was first built in 1911, was then thoroughly upgraded and enlarged in 1923, then was fully reconstructed in 1928. Cleanliness, neatness, and durability characterized the streets, which were all repaved with concrete, asphalt, or macadam during the 1920s.

A large part of Haddon Height's appeal lay in its convenient transportation facilities. For commuting to work or for excursions to the seashore, the railroad was an essential feature. The trolley, which served the community from 1903 through 1937, was Public Service's line from the Ferry Street terminal in Camden to Clementon. During the 1920s, dozens of buses also served the town. After 1900, the automobile played an increasing role in the community. A large proportion of the houses in the district were built with detached garages. The first automobile dealership in town opened about 1903, selling Willys Overlands. About 1904, one local developer offered to sell as a package "a five-room house, a garage, a one-half-acre lot, six tons of coal, and an Overland car," all for $3,975.(5) The White Horse Pike and Kings Highway became major automobile routes during the early twentieth century.

The eastern portion of Haddon Heights, including the White Horse Pike Residential District, was fully developed by about 1925. Much of the housing built in the early 1920s was probably developed in anticipation of the opening of the Benjamin Franklin Bridge, then under construction between Philadelphia and Camden. Its completion in 1926 led to a dramatic increase among residents who commuted by automobile to work in Philadelphia. It also led to suburban residential growth in adjacent communities. The Boroughs of Audubon to the west and Barrington to the east were incorporated in 1905 and 1917 respectively, and as automobile traffic increased, residential development in these municipalities gradually eliminated the open land that had existed adjacent to Haddon Heights. Today, Camden County east of the City of Camden is fully developed; however, the architecture and the sense of spaciousness that made Haddon Heights a model early-twentieth-century middle-class suburb, remain evident in the streets and houses of the district.

Boundary description:

Although the longitudinal axis of the White Horse Pike Residential District actually runs northwest-southeast, for convenience the district has been described throughout this nomination as though the axis were true north-south.

Boundaries of the White Horse Pike Residential District are defined as follows (lot and block numbers refer to those shown on the accompanying tax map):

Beginning at the intersection of the east curb of White Horse Pike and the south curb of Green Street; thence, east along the south curb of Green Street to the east (rear) line of Lot 12, Block 19; thence, south along the east (rear) lines of Lots 12 through 20, Block 19, to the north curb of Station Avenue; thence, west along the north curb of Station Avenue to the east curb of Fourth Avenue; thence, south along the east curb of Fourth Avenue to the north line of Lot 12, Block 20; thence, east along the north line of Lot 12, Block 20 to the east (rear) line of that lot; thence, south along the east (rear) lines of Lots 12 through 17, Block 20 and Lots 10 through 18, Block 30, to the north curb of High Street; thence, west along the north curb of High Street and along the same line extended to the west curb of Fourth Avenue; thence, north along the west curb of Fourth Avenue to the south curb of High Street; thence, west along the south curb of High Street to the east line of Lot 15A, Block 34; thence, south along the east (generally rear) lines of Lots 15A through 23, Block 34 to the north curb of Haddon Street; thence, west along the north curb of Haddon Street to the west (rear) line of Lot 8, Block 37; thence, north along the west (rear) lines of Lots 8 through 1 (in descending order), Block 37, and of Lots 11, 10, and 9, Block 36, to the southeast corner of Lot 22, Block 36; thence, west along the south line of Lot 22, Block 36, to the east curb of East Atlantic Avenue; thence, north along the east curb of East Atlantic Avenue to the north line of Lot 23, Block 26; thence, east along the north line of Lot 23 to the southwest corner of Lot 14, Block 26; thence, north along the rear line of Lot 14 and east along the north line of that lot to the west curb of White Horse Pike; thence, north along the west curb of White Horse Pike to the south line of Lot 7, Block 25; thence, west along the south line of Lot 7, Block 25 to the west (rear) line of said lot; thence, north along the west (rear) lines of lots 7, 6, 5, 4-A, and 4, to the southeast corner of Lot 10, Block 25; thence, west along the south line of Lot 10 to the east curb of East Atlantic Avenue; thence, north along the east curb of East Atlantic Avenue to the north line of Lot 5, Block 24; thence, east along the north line of Lot 5 to the west (rear) line of Lot 4, Block 24; thence, north along the west (rear) lines of Lots 4, 3, 2, and 1, Block 24 to the south curb of Kings Highway; thence, east along the south curb of Kings Highway to the west curb of White Horse Pike; thence, south along the west curb of White Horse Pike to the southeast corner of Lot 2, Block 24; thence, in a straight line to the northwest corner of Lot 4, Block 21; thence, east, south, and west along the north, east and south lines of the said Lot 4, returning to the east curb of White Horse Pike; thence, south along the east curb of White Horse Pike to the point of beginning in the south curb of Green Street.

Boundary justification:

Boundaries of the National Register nomination for the White Horse Pike Residential District are essentially coterminous with those of the historic district proposed for creation under local ordinance. The boundaries have been drawn to encompass one of the major concentrations of buildings that embody the development of Haddon Heights as a residential suburb in the years from c. 1890 to c. 1915. It should be noted that there are within the boundaries of the district a few buildings which predate (as early as c. 1879) or postdate (as late as c. 1930) the primary period of significance; because they are related in architectural style and quality as well as in scale, massing and material to buildings constructed within the primary period for the district, these slightly earlier and slightly later buildings are considered to be contributing buildings.

On the eastern side of the district, the boundaries have been drawn to eliminate properties fronting on Third Avenue, including two churches that run west through the block to Fourth Avenue. Third Avenue has been excluded because a high proportion of its buildings either were constructed after the period of significance defined for the National Register district or have been so altered as to destroy their integrity and that of the streetscape. For the same reasons, buildings on Fourth Avenue south of High Street have also been omitted.

Properties on the east side of White Horse Pike south of Haddon Street have been excluded from the district because collectively they represent a later phase of the town's development (c. 1925 and after) and because they are of lesser architectural quality than the buildings within the district boundaries. Property on the west side of White Horse Pike south of Haddon Street and on the east side of East Atlantic Avenue south of Lot 22, Block 36, has been excluded from the district because it consists of modern commercial buildings, parking lots, and vacant lots.

The western side of the district is defined essentially by East Atlantic Avenue and the track of the Pennsylvania-Reading Seashore Lines (originally the Philadelphia and Atlantic City Railroad), which create a distinct physical and visual break between this district and other

United States Department of the Interior
National Park Service

residential areas of Haddon Heights to the west. The western boundary of the district jogs to omit commercial buildings on Station Avenue, which will be addressed at a later date in a separate National Register nomination. Several non-contributing properties fronting on East Atlantic Avenue have also been excluded from the district boundaries: Lot 22, Block 26 (house, post-World War II); Lots 11, 14 and 15, Block 25 (high-rise housing for senior citizens and modern commercial building); and Lots 6-9, Block 24 (a modern school and associated playground and parking).

At its northern edge the boundaries of the district have been extended along the White Horse Pike to Kings Highway (the northern boundary of the Borough of Haddon Heights) to allow inclusion of three c. 1910 houses, numbers 2, 9 and 10 White Horse Pike, and a 1909 church, St. Mary's Episcopal. Although consideration was given to omitting these buildings because of intervening non-contributing properties, it was decided to include them because of the visual introduction they provide when the district is approached from the north. The building at 2 White Horse Pike, which has recently been restored, is particularly important for its contrast to the commercial buildings and parking lot that stand outside the district at the intersection of Kings Highway and White Horse Pike.

Consideration was also given to breaking the district into separate north and south sections because of the concentration of modern buildings along Station Avenue between White Horse Pike and Fourth Avenue. This alternative was rejected because of the strong north-south axis of the district, both historical and physical. Vistas along the three major north-south streets, and in particular along the White Horse Pike and Fourth Avenue with their broad lawns and lines of mature trees, are essential in conveying the historic character of the district.

This structure is representative of the Queen Anne style of architecture which was popular in the late 19th century. Key features of the Queen Anne style are the use of more than one building material, turrets, an asymmetrical facade, front and side porches, and Classical detailing. In Haddon Heights, Queen Anne houses are concentrated along the older streets near the railroad tracks. Despite its alterations, this structure is significant as one of the most high style Queen Anne houses in Haddon Heights and it contributes to the significance of the historic district.

SIGNIFICANCE:

This structure is a representative example of the American Four Square house which was very popular in the early 20th century. The four square house was featured in numerous builders' catalogues, was readily available to the middle class market, and featured a variety of stylistic detailing. This structure represents the Prairie style of architecture. This structure has retained much of its original integrity of design, material, workmanship, and setting, and contributes to the significance of the historic district.

This structure is a representative example of the American Four Square house which was very popular in the early 20th century. The four square house was featured in numerous builders' catalogues, was readily available to the middle class market, and featured a variety of stylistic detailing. The prominent bay and tri-part windows, reflective of Georgian architecture, are unusual features for an American Four Square house. Despite the synthetic siding, this structure has retained much of its original integrity of design and form and contributes to the significance of the historic district.
