Describe the present and original (if known) physical appearance

This timber frame residence has a large hipped roof, thin clapboard siding and a granite foundation. There are very small modillion blocks beneath the wide over-hanging eaves. The windows consist of six-over-six double-hung sash. Located in the center of the five bay facade is the main entrance, which is in the Federal style and is the main decorative feature. The door is flanked by pilasters and sidelights supporting a louvered fan. The small portico over this entrance has simple square posts and probably dates from the early twentieth century. The house faces south.

Statement of Significance (in one paragraph)

This house is particularly distinguished by its association with three prominent figures in the field of jurisprudence. Henry Weld Fuller, its builder, acquired the property the same year the house was erected. It was an area of some one-hundred acres in what is now the center of Augusta. This fortunate purchase eventually made him a very wealthy man. He was very active in public affairs, serving in the General Court, as Colonel in the State Militia, and as a very active lawyer serving various of the Plymouth Proprietors. He was eventually appointed Judge of Probate for Kennebec County. Fuller sold the house in 1827 to Hon. Nathan Weston, who, in 1820 had been appointed to the bench of the Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. In 1834 he was elevated to the Chief Justice of this high court. Weston's daughter, Catherine married the above-mentioned Henry Weld Fuller's son, Frederic A. and, in 1833, gave birth to a son, Melville Weston Fuller. Shortly thereafter, the parents were divorced and the boy went to live with his grandfather Weston. One may suppose that the relationship between these two strongly influenced young Fuller. He continued to live in the house until attending Bowdoin College, graduating in 1853. Receiving a law degree from Harvard Law School in 1855, he returned to Augusta where he practiced and became active in civic affairs, serving as president of the city council. In 1859 he moved to Chicago and worked in several law firms and became distinguished for his ability and scholarship. Always a staunch Democrat, he was a close friend and supporter of Stephen A. Douglas. In 1888, President Cleveland, who had previously offered him high diplomatic posts, which he refused, appointed him Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court, a position which he held until his death in 1910. He was highly respected as a jurist and participated in many key decisions including the first income tax cases, the Chinese exclusion cases and the Northern Securities Case.
