Describe the present and original (if known) physical appearance

The one story, 1885 Riede's City Bakery is a small, false front commercial building. Constructed of wood frame and clapboard, it sits on the Hyman Avenue Mall between two modern brick buildings - a reminder of Aspen's 19th century silver mining days.

The original store front, which had large display windows flanking a recessed entrance, was altered probably in the 1940s when it became Louie's Spirit House. The large display windows were reduced to small rectangular windows with the rest of the opening and the clerestories closed up. The recessed door was brought forward to the exterior wall plane. In 1985, the store front was restored to its original appearance by Aspen architect, Welton Anderson. The entry was put in the original recessed location and the display windows and clerestories were opened up to their original sizes.

Many original wood elements, such as the paneled kick plates below the windows, the bracketed secondary cornice with a saw tooth frieze, and the false front with a cornice, brackets and frieze, were not altered in the 1940s and still remain in place. (photo #16, 16a)

Nothing original remains on the interior, which has seen many remodelings including the 1985 work. There is a cinder block addition, 13 x 30 feet, which was put onto the rear of the building in 1959 for storage space.

Riede's City Bakery is a locally designated landmark and is located in the Commercial Core Overlay District.

Statement of Significance (in one paragraph)

Riede's City Bakery building is significant as the only one of two wood frame and clapboard buildings remaining in the commercial section of Aspen. This building is an important link in Aspen's 19th century commercial development from tents and log structures to wood frame and finally brick buildings. The Riede Bakery, which may be one of Aspen's oldest frame commercial buildings, retains much of its original appearance with narrow clapboards, wooden cornice with brackets. The original shape and placement of the display windows and recessed entry were restored in 1985.

BACKGROUND

The Riede City Bakery was built in 1885 at the beginning of Aspen's most productive silver mining years. It represents the wood frame and clapboard commercial building type which followed the log cabins. The other remaining frame building in the commercial section is the altered Archibald-McKenzie Building (the Mother Lode) at 314 E. Hyman.

The original owner or occupant of this building is not documented, but may have been Moses Burke's bakery and grocery which was here in 1889. ¹ Raymond Riede, moved into the building ca. 1890 and opened a bakery and confectionery. Riede, who came to Aspen in late 1887 or early 1888, opened a store at an unknown location and carried the "best brands of California canned goods, California 'green fruits' and confectionery". ² Riede was able to ride out the depression following the 1893 Silver Crash while many others went out of business. He remained at this location until ca. 1907-1908. ³

During the Great Depression, Sweeney's Second-Hand Store occupied the building. In 1946, Irene and Louie Pastore from Denver bought the building, which still contained old merchandise from the second-hand store. When the water and sewer lines were laid to the building, the remains of the outdoor brick ovens were discovered. In June, 1946, Aspen's first licensed liquor store opened as Louie's Spirit House, which remained there until ca. 1975. ⁴ It then became Uncle Willy's Spirit House and is now a ladies apparel shop, Sorensen's International.

Since 1945, the building interior was remodeled a number of times.

In 1985, the store front was restored to its original appearance and the much remodeled interior was refurbished at the same time. ²
