Red Oak Downtown Historic District
Name of Property

Montgomery County, Iowa
County and State

Red Oak, Montgomery County, Iowa is a town of approximately 5,500 residents on 4 square miles of land located in the southwest corner of the state at the intersection of U.S. Highway 34 and State Highway 48. The Red Oak Downtown Historic District encompasses most of the downtown area where the rolling hills of this area flatten between State Highway 48 and Red Oak Creek, a tributary of the East Nishnabotna River.

Lining all four sides of Fountain Square, the main commercial center of Red Oak consists of two- and three-story attached two-part commercial blocks that stretch onto side streets in all directions, giving way to free-standing buildings at the edges of the District. A second square, upon which is centered the Montgomery County Courthouse, is located two blocks west of Fountain Square. Just over 35 percent of the buildings in the District were constructed before 1900. Many early buildings exhibit Italianate, Queen Anne, Romanesque and Classical Revival detailing, while later buildings exhibit a more vernacular form, with Brick Front buildings representing the most common building type. A significant number of these buildings exhibit first floor storefront alterations from the Mid-Twentieth Century, physically illustrating their connection to economic growth after World War II.

The Red Oak Downtown Historic District is a mix of attached commercial buildings and free-standing governmental, commercial and light industrial buildings. It includes 88 primary buildings, 14 objects, 1 structure and 1 site within an area roughly bound on the east by the property line to the east of N Fifth Street, on the south by the property line south of Washington Avenue, on the west by N First Street, and on the north by Hammond Street. Of these, 73 buildings, 8 objects and 1 site are considered contributing to the District. In addition, the Carnegie Library, City Hall and Fire Department, and Montgomery County Courthouse are currently listed in the National Register of Historic Places.

Non-contributing buildings are lightly scattered throughout the District. Those that are commercial buildings are generally non-contributing due to the removal of historic material over time. Those that are residential are non-contributing due to their lack of association with commerce or transportation in Red Oak. There are four buildings currently considered non-contributing that may be re-evaluated at a later date if their facade slipcovers are removed. All of the non-contributing objects are found in Fountain Square and were constructed after 1965. The brick streets surrounding Fountain Square are considered a single structure and are non-contributing because they have been recently reconstructed and contain no historic material.

Narrative Description

The Red Oak Downtown Historic District is located just east of State Highway 48 on level land north of Red Oak Creek. The focus of the District is Fountain Square, the central public green space around which the town was initially platted in 1857. A second public square for the County Courthouse was dedicated in 1890 after the town won the ballot to move the County Courthouse. The District extends off Fountain Square in all directions, aligning with the concentration of commercial, light industrial and governmental buildings in the area.

Several factors influenced the boundaries of this historic District. These included the overall development of commerce in Red Oak, the original route of Highway 34, and the location of key anchor buildings in the proposed District. A wider area was originally surveyed, but reduced to the current boundaries due to the number of churches and residential intrusions which have no commercial association with the District. The remaining area includes the principal concentration of historic office and retail buildings of Red Oak through all eras of development, as well as those with social, governmental and light industrial functions that played a role in the town's development.

Most buildings in the Red Oak Downtown Historic District are two-part commercial blocks. They tend to reflect their era of construction utilizing popular styles and materials of their day. The limited number of one-story buildings in the district vacillate between one-part commercial blocks and roadside commercial buildings.

The three buildings with facade slip covers are the M.E. Fisher Co./Adams Express Co./Conner Brothers Barbers Building (209-211-213 E Coolbaugh St); the two separate buildings that presently comprise the Hardware Hank store (311-313 E Reed St and 315 E Reed St). All of these buildings have received renovations that alter their appearance to such an extent that they cannot be considered eligible; however, the work in all three cases appears to be reversible. When their present veneers are removed, the buildings may be re-evaluated. If sufficient historic material is found beneath the buildings veneers, and if that material is capable of being preserved and/or restored, the buildings may be re-considered as contributing to the potential district.

The table below summarizes physical and historical information about individual buildings within the district. Where no common historic name was used, the first known business name was substituted. Information on building history, modifications and dates were generally gleaned from newspaper articles, local history books and local promotional books. Buildings that were constructed by a single owner with a comprehensive facade, were considered one, even though they may have multiple bays. This includes buildings with additions. However, where radical changes have taken place that divide these facades into distinct designs, each design has been counted separately.

Red Oak completed a Downtown Revitalization Master Plan in January 2012. One of the implementation items included the designation of a National Register Historic District and the application of the Main Street Philosophy of Economic Development through Historic Preservation. Redevelopment guidelines for this district will be managed by the Downtown Urban Renewal Board through a Zoning Overlay and Graphic Based Code. The community leaders believe this approach will help current property owners and future developers take the appropriate action to utilize local, state, and federal incentives when rehabilitating a property, without destroying the character that makes Red Oak’s downtown unique.

The above plan resulted in Red Oak qualifying for a CDBG Downtown Revitalization Grant for Façade Improvements. This project included funding through CDBG and local Tax Increment Financing programs. Site Inventory Forms for all buildings in the proposed district and an Intensive Level Survey were completed during this process to facilitate the project review. Staff of the Montgomery County Historical Society provided invaluable research assistance for each Site Inventory Form and the nomination. The Red Oak Historic Preservation Commission funded the project, as well as assisting with supplemental research and editing the nomination.

When completed, 18 buildings within the Red Oak Downtown Historic District participated in the CDBG Façade Improvement Program. These included 502, 505, 509 and 601 N Third St, 504, 506, 508, 512 and 518 N Fourth St, 318, 320, 322, 407 and 409 E Coolbaugh St, and 301, 305, 307 and 401 E Reed St. Projects ranged from simple repainting and repointing, to the removal of non-historic slip covers and the repair of underlying historic material. Outlines of these projects are included in the table.

At this time, this district has considerable integrity. Its location has not changed over time. The setting of the district, primarily consisting of two-part commercial blocks surrounding Fountain Square, is generally intact, as is the transition along the side streets between it and the surrounding residential area and adjacent highway strip development. Multi-story buildings generally retain their historic materials and detailing, and exhibit workmanship from pre-1940. Missing metal cornices are the most notable upper-story alteration. Many of the storefronts on these same buildings exhibit mid-twentieth century renovations that have gained historic significance over time. Not all buildings have such a mixed appearance. Some wholly retain their original design while others exhibit an entirely renovated facade. The CDBG project worked well with the historic material, repairing and retaining it where possible. The new material introduced with this work was installed in a sensitive manner and did not detract from any building's integrity. Today, the variety and layering of design elements, workmanship, materials and details are evidence of associations with many former businesses, social organizations and government entities. The overwhelming feeling is one of an environment rich in history. In conclusion, the resources within the Red Oak Downtown Historic District are generally in good condition and retain the integrity necessary to convey their association with the development of commerce in Red Oak.

Future Plans

Additional projects are currently underway in the district that will maintain its integrity. Initial design work is being completed for the infill in the North 500 block of N Third Street and a Federal and State Tax Credit certified rehabilitation at 501 and 503 N. N Third St. The Non-Profit Red Oak Grand Theatre has purchased the building at 408 E Coolbaugh St, which is adjacent to its current location, for renovation and rehabilitation as a second screen for their volunteer based shows. The building at 404 E Coolbaugh St is currently undergoing rehabilitation for conversion to an event center. 322 E Coolbaugh St has undergone recent interior renovations / improvements to upgrade the kitchen and dining areas and reopened as a new restaurant. Additional signage and exterior seating for this building will be completed late summer 2016. The re-roofing of the Montgomery County Court House was recently bid and will be starting construction this summer. New slate shingles will be installed on the body of the building, the broken and missing terra cotta finials will be replaced with new material to match the existing and the tower roofs with their structural tiles will remain.

Statement of Significance Summary Paragraph (Provide a summary paragraph that includes level of significance, applicable criteria, justification for the period of significance, and any applicable criteria considerations.)

The Red Oak Downtown Historic District, located in Red Oak, Montgomery County, Iowa, is locally significant under Criterion A in the area of commerce and transportation for its illustration of the progression of business growth and development of Red Oak from 1870 to 1965. The construction of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy (CB&Q) Railroad to Red Oak in 1869, its extension to Nebraska City, Nebraska in 1870 and the construction of the second line to Griswold, Iowa shortly after gave Red Oak its first taste of success. The heavy concentration of commercial buildings surrounding Fountain Square historically housed a wide variety of businesses, including dry goods stores, restaurants, meat markets, clothing stores, jewelry stores, furniture stores, grocery stores, and other retail establishments. Several of these businesses are, or were, in Red Oak for generations, including the Brown Shoe Fit Store, Montgomery State Bank, and Houghton State Bank. These businesses were supported by the employees of local industry, such as the Murphy Calendar Company and Wilson Concrete, and local government, such as those involved in county services. The movement of businesses between buildings, the construction of new buildings and the renovation of others illustrate the waxing and waning of their prosperity individually and as a collective whole. The district's evolution was influenced by the rise and fall of the Red Oak population, changes in transportation modes and routes, and national forces such as the Golden Age of Agriculture, the Great Depression and the Golden Age of Capitalism.¹

The district is also locally significant from 1870 to 1965 under Criterion C for its demonstration of the patterns of development, central square layout and architecture outlined in the Multiple Property Document Iowa's Main Street Commercial Architecture. Specifically, the district fits the MPD Section F: Property Type 1: Commercial Districts. It matches this description of districts with its typical street plan, green space, courthouse square and architecture profile, including building height, density and age/style range. Like many towns described here, it had its share of fires, including one in 1902 which took most of the buildings in the 300 block of Coolbaugh. However, like the examples in the MPD, Red Oak rebuilt and continued to thrive. Its promotion as the heart of Red Oak is the common marker of significance outlined in the MPD for this Property Type. Further, it meets the registration requirements of Section F: Property Type 1 under Criterion A for its central role in the continued commercial success of Red Oak over 95 years. While there are a limited number of empty lots and modern intrusions, they are a part of Red Oak's continued evolution and are acceptable under the integrity considerations for this property type.

The district is also locally significant under Criterion A in the area of Social History for its association with veterans from the three largest U.S. conflicts between 1865 and 1945. Red Oak, with its strong commitment to the U.S. military, had numerous residents involved in the Civil War, World War I and World War II. Company M ran drills in the Armory (500 E Coolbaugh St), the only building in Red Oak that has a direct association with military history. However, U.S. veterans both directly and indirectly influenced commerce in Red Oak. Like veterans across Iowa, veterans who returned from war to own and manage businesses in Red Oak's commercial core brought their military values back with them and used that experience to run their companies.

¹ The term "Golden Age of Capitalism" is used by both academic and popular economists to refer to a period from roughly 1950 to 1973. For example, the term is used in the title of such works as The Golden Age of Capitalism: Reinterpreting the Postwar Experience by Stephen A. Marglin and Juliet B. Schor (Oxford: Clarendon Press; New York: Oxford University Press, 1990) as well as within economic books such as Economics: An Introduction to Traditional and Progressive Views by Howard J. Sherman, E. K. Hunt, Reynold F. Nesiba, Phillip A. O'Hara and Barbara A. Wiens-Tuers (Armonk, N.Y. : M.E. Sharpe, 2008).

As a group, the veterans' associations with the Historic District are reflected not only in the war memorials within the centrally-located Fountain Square, but also in the changes they made to the buildings that housed their businesses. Like other successful businessmen, veterans made their mark with new buildings and alterations to older ones. Their joint success and influence on the development of Red Oak is illustrated in their associations with many of the buildings in the district.

Narrative Statement of Significance (Provide at least one paragraph for each area of significance.)

Criterion A and C - Commerce, Transportation and Architecture

The Influence of General Remick on the Selection and Initial Success of the Red Oak Town Site

Unlike many towns in Iowa of this era, Red Oak was not platted by the railroad; instead it was platted privately after the preliminary route of the future Burlington and Quincy Railroad was surveyed. In 1853, Montgomery County was officially designated. Separately that same year, a topographical survey was completed for a proposed railway line.² The proposed line by-passed the initial county seat of Frankfort because the land there was too steep. Instead, the line went to flatter land at the junction of Red Oak Creek and the Nishnabotna River.³ The land where Red Oak is located was first settled by James Shank and Pleasant Jones. Shank staked a claim on the north half of the southwest quarter of section 28 in 1854, while Jones squatted on the south half of the northwest quarter of the same section.⁴ After formalizing his claim in 1855, Jones sold his claim to David Remick in 1857.⁵

Born in Quebec, Canada in 1820, by the early 1850s, David Remick had made a small fortune in the California gold rush and subsequently lost it in a failed business venture in Nicaragua. Around 1855, while developing other business interests, Remick became an agent of the Burlington and Quincy Railroad at Burlington, Iowa; a post which he held through at least 1857.⁶ This connection likely influenced his decision to purchase Jones' land. He paused his business endeavors in 1861 to serve in the Union Army as a commissary officer during the Civil War, after which he moved around Iowa and Nebraska, developing lumber yards, saw mills, banks and land interests in both states. In 1871, he married James Shank's niece, Sarah Jane Harding. In 1894, he moved to Los Angeles, California, where he developed additional banking and land interests until his death in 1901.⁷

Red Oak Junction, as it was first known, was platted on July 22, 1857, three years after the Shanks established their land claim and four years after the Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company survey party passed through the county.⁸ The original plat extended from North First Street (North Broadway) to North Eighth Street, and from the alley north of East Joy Street to the north side of East Market Street. Following the Block Square plan described in E.T. Price's study of courthouse square plan types, Red Oak was laid out with a central public square (Fountain Square). This area was set aside with the stipulation that it never be built upon. The original ownership split aligns with what is now E Coolbaugh Street. The town's founding, concurrent with the establishment of surrounding farms, is consistent with the pattern of town creation found in Iowa's Main Street Commercial Architecture, which points out that "many Iowa towns... were consciously created outposts on an unsettled prairie."⁹

In 1856, the state of Iowa ordered a road to be built across the southern side of the state, and required that the railroad follow this same route. These links were preceded, however, by the mail route. The first mail route through Montgomery County was established in 1855 and stopped at the Post Office in Oro, a small town two miles north of the Red Oak town site. Two years later, first a ferry and then a bridge provided access across the Nishnabotna River for mail service. The bridge was short lived, however, as it washed out in July 1858. After several months, Remick purchased the old ferry and, with the help of other settlers, moved it down river to Red Oak, establishing a river crossing there.¹⁰ The mail route naturally followed.

The proposed road, railroad line and mail route all gave seed to the town's local economic and social significance as a transportation and commercial center. In July 1858, the Western Stage Company began daily service between Chariton, Iowa and Plattsmouth, Nebraska, via Red Oak.¹¹ The stagecoach route followed Coolbaugh Street (the north edge of Remick's claim) along the south side of Fountain Square and spurred the construction of both the town's first way-station and the town's first store. Mr. Harding, Remick's father-in-law, built a large house on the northwest corner of N Fifth Street and E Coolbaugh Street in 1858 and often accommodated travelers. In 1860 it was officially declared the stage company's station.¹² The building continued to serve this function until the railroads arrived.¹³ Today, it is non-extant. The mail and stage route, however, continued after the railroad came to town, and became known as the Blue Grass Trail.

Growth was generally slow until the railroad was actually constructed through the area. Even without the railroad, however, its potential appearance and the town's location along the East Nishnabotna River attracted settlers interested in constructing mills and bridges. In 1860 the town boasted a population of 207. Businesses and residences were established, as were many civic societies, including local associations of the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons (A.F. & A.M.; founded in 1861) and the Grand Army of the Republic (G.A.R.; founded in 1867). In the summer of 1868, Justus Clark and Colonel Hebard¹⁴ counted every dwelling, store, barn, shed, and outbuilding in the town and found a total of fifty buildings in all.¹⁵ None are extant.

Securing the County Seat and Construction of the Railroad Leads to Initial Commercial Success

Despite the ongoing Civil War, by 1863, it was clear that the original wood-framed County Courthouse in Frankfort was in need of replacement. However, the knowledge that the railroad would bypass the town and Red Oak's additional advantage of having an adjacent river spurred the introduction of a ballot to move the County Seat to Red Oak. With just 6 votes to spare, Red Oak won the election.¹⁶ The move brought with it the economic stimulus of government jobs and the security of a significant, stable employer with the spinoffs of the County Jail and legal offices, and the trickle down effects to local commerce. By 1866, the wood framed courthouse building was moved to the northwest corner of the public square and county services were supplemented by rented rooms in buildings surrounding the square.¹⁷

After the conclusion of the Civil War, construction of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy (CB&Q) Railroad line began in earnest. In November 1869 the railroad reached Red Oak. Within town, the line was routed three blocks south of Red Oak Creek, which delineates the southern edge of the Historic District. In July 1870, the rail line was connected to Nebraska City, Nebraska. Several years later, the CB&Q Railroad constructed a rail line north from Red Oak to Griswold, Iowa to prevent a rival railroad from constructing a line that ran through Red Oak between Atlantic, Iowa and St. Louis, Missouri. This north/south line was extended at an unknown date and eventually connected Atlantic and St. Louis.¹⁸ Together, the railroad lines fulfilled the prophesy of the town's original name, Red Oak Junction, making it a true crossing point of a transportation system that was the fastest, most reliable, and had the largest overland capacity for its time.

The steady supply of people and goods allowed the town to grow quickly and spurred the formal incorporation of Red Oak in July 1869.¹⁹ According to O.P. Worsley, by the time he came to town in April 1869 businesses around the public square included a general store and a drug store on the south side; two general stores and a newspaper office on the west side; a law office, the courthouse, and a general store on the north side; as well as the Masonic lodge (with store below), a second store and drug store on the east side. Several other businesses were set further off the square.²⁰ Civic societies of the time included the International Order of Odd Fellows (I.O.O.F.; founded in 1869) and the Knights of Honor (founded in 1878), in addition to those previously mentioned.

The influx of immigrants prompted by the railroad, courthouse and other circumstances caused Red Oak's population to surge from 1,315 in 1870 to 3,755 in 1880. The booming population outweighed the effects of the national Panic of 1873 on the local economy. The 1875 fire insurance map of Red Oak illustrates a typical boom town of the late nineteenth century. A fairly dense core of commercial buildings surrounded the public square. Most buildings were relatively shallow, filling only half the lot depth; however, there were no open lots between them and their two- and three-story height gave the effect of a more prosperous town. Approximately 3/4 of the buildings on the square were of wood frame construction, despite the formation of the Red Oak Pottery Works (and brick factory) in 1874. Off the square were smaller wood-framed residential buildings, often with open lots between them. The 1875 Business Directory from the Illustrated Historical Atlas of the State of Iowa listed 63 businesses that provided a full range of services for residents of Red Oak and the surrounding area. These included 7 attorneys, an implement dealership, an apiarian, a bank, a butcher, a brewer, a bookstore, a boot and shoe store, a blacksmith and wagon manufacturer, 4 builders, a clothing store, a capitalist, a carriage manufacturer, a dentist, 2 dry goods stores, an engineer, a furniture store, 2 grocers, 5 grain dealers, 3 hotels, 1 hardware store, 2 harness shops, a jeweler, a livery stable, a land agent, a lumber dealer, a lime manufacturer, a music and sewing machine shop, 4 millers, 2 publishers, 3 doctors, 1 photographer, 2 real estate agents, 1 surveyor, 2 stoneware manufacturers, 1 stove shop and a sewing machine shop. This directory included one of the district's oldest extant building, the Lane Block (503 N Third St).

An outgrowth of the town's first store, the Lane Block exemplifies a trend amongst early investors, who purchased multiple properties, using some for their own businesses and others as investments, in addition to investing in other business. In this Victorian two-part commercial block the Lane's Farmer's Store continued to sell a bit of everything, including dry goods, furniture, boots and shoes, clothing, carpets, hardware, groceries, agricultural implements and wagons. The building also served as a hall at times. Although it has been altered through the years and lost its cornice, window hoods and storefront from this era, its form, massing and overall masonry detailing still remain to represent these earliest commercial buildings in Red Oak.

As with many developing towns of this era in the Midwest, Red Oak's downtown density and wood frame construction was ready fuel for fire, which had both a devastating and renewing effect. The fire of December 23, 1875 was the first major fire in Red Oak. It burned most of the east side of the public square, including J.F. Fisher's grocery store and butcher shop.²¹ A second fire started on September 18, 1876 and destroyed 13 frame buildings on both sides of E Coolbaugh Street, one block west of the public square.²² In September 1882, the Houghton & Bishop Opera House, at the northeast corner of the square, burned down.²³ This did not deter the settlers. Most buildings were quickly replaced with fire-proof construction and with edifices that were perceived by their owners as more attractive and better suited to their purposes. Local contractors Bolt & Hendrix, and D.S. Hass are credited with the construction of many downtown buildings in the 1870s and 1880s. A select few were designed by local architect George West, including the Masonic Lodge, the National Bank Building and the First National Bank.

Downtown Develops Fireproof Buildings and Widens Businesses Types

Although planning began as early as 1871 to replace the old frame County Courthouse building, it was not until 1883 that local voters agreed to the construction.²⁴ Because deed restrictions on the central public square prevented construction within its bounds, a different location was sought for the new building. As early as 1876, the Johnsons' sold lots 3-9 to the County, with the stipulation that construction on the Courthouse had to begin within 99 years, or the land would revert to their family.²⁵ Finally, in 1890, the County obtained the remaining lots on that block, approved the new building plans and construction began.²⁶

The County retained the services of architect H.C. Koch, of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, who was also hired by Jefferson County, Iowa to design their County Courthouse. The two courthouses are very similar, although why this occurred is unclear. Fairfield, Iowa, where the Jefferson County Courthouse is located, is at the eastern end of the state on the same CB&Q railroad line. It may be that Koch offered a deal to both towns if they constructed similar buildings at the same time. Or perhaps more personal connections influenced the similarities in the buildings. Thomas Griffith, then Mayor of Red Oak, and others may have been guided in the selection of the architect and design of the building by Griffith's father-in-law, Charles Negus, an influential judge in Jefferson County. Then again, Montgomery County was slightly ahead of Jefferson County in approving and constructing their building. However it occurred, the buildings are remarkably similar in appearance. In Montgomery County, the fireproof Victorian Romanesque building remains an imposing building and can be seen on axis from the center of Fountain Square.

The rest of the downtown was growing and changing as well. The 1886 Sanborn map illustrates the improvements. Many of the earliest buildings were replaced with larger, more substantial buildings. Iowa's Main Street Commercial Architecture describes the myriad reasons this occurred. Among these was the desire for more fire-proof construction, the fact that brick was seen as more substantial and established and that wooden commercial buildings had often been out-grown.²⁷ Buildings around the square were most often multi-story, Victorian, two-part commercial brick structures, filling the front three-fourths of their lots. Banks were located on three out of four street corners surrounding Fountain Square. Today, the buildings that survive from this era have generally undergone a series of alterations, removing many of their Victorian decorative elements, and leaving their massing, form and masonry detailing to represent the businesses they originally housed.

The I.O.O.F hall exemplified these traits. Three bays wide, the building filled the front three-quarters of its lot, providing growing businesses with additional floor area for their goods and services. Its masonry construction was highlighted by brick quoins, stone window sills, and stone window hoods. An ornate metal cornice and cast iron storefronts filled the tenants' desire for a modern storefront that displayed their wares to full advantage.

Room in the district was made for new businesses as well through the expansion of the downtown area. From Fountain Square, the downtown extended one block west on both sides of E Coolbaugh Street, half a block west on the north side of E Reed Street, one block east on the north side of E Reed Street, half a block north on the west side of N Third Street and one block south on the west side of N Third Street. In contrast to the office and retail space fronting Fountain Square, the fringe developed into light industrial businesses, including the Palmer and Company lumber yard, T.H. Dearborn's coal yard, several unnamed liverys, a feed yard, and the jail and armory.

Golden Age of Agriculture Sets the Stage for Red Oak's Success

During the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries, as America became urbanized, the population shifted from subsistence farming to a farm-as-business model. Silos meant a steady year-round food supply for larger numbers of animals, and vaccines lead to healthier animals, leading to larger herds. Rural free mail delivery in 1901 brought trade journals that encouraged increased production and quality products.²⁸ This was supported by mechanization. The growing availability of railroads and trucks meant that farmers could produce more for their own use and then sell surplus to those living in towns.

It was during this period that several long-standing agricultural-related industries were founded in Red Oak, including the Replogle Mill (1889), the Fisher hog packing plant (1890s) and the Red Oak Canning Company (1902). While all of these businesses were located on the outskirts of town, they supported Red Oak's economy through employment of its residents and patronage of local merchants. In addition, Fisher kept a butcher shop on Fountain Square.²⁹ The Replogle Mill was one of the largest in southwest Iowa and by 1906 supplied flour to over 100 towns.³⁰ The canning company, when in season, was a significant employer. Every fall between 90 and 100 workers were busy canning corn.³¹

The 1889 business directory published on December 13th in the Red Oak Express, listed 126 businesses. Ranging from marble works, to bottling companies, to restaurants and physicians, the directory listed the business name and owner's name, but gave only general indications of the business locations (i.e. East Side Square). Comparing the directory to the 1891 Sanborn map, it appears to be a fairly complete list of downtown businesses. Like the fires in the late 1870s, the growing number of businesses spurred change and development. Compared to the buildings shown in the district on the 1886 Sanborn map, 24 commercial buildings were removed by 1891. Approximately half were replaced with more substantial buildings for similar functions. Vacant parcels that remained were left as open lots or replaced with residential buildings.

The Panic of 1893 dampened business growth in Red Oak. In fact, several of the buildings on the north side of the square were vacant. Of the remaining existing buildings, a comparison of the 1891 and 1899 Sanborn maps show significant business turn over. The majority of buildings housed different businesses in 1899 and there were limited changes to the built environment for new additional businesses. With the exception of the north end of the east side of the square, the 1899 Sanborn map illustrates that buildings surrounding Fountain Square remained the same and the changes were generally in the half block of commercial buildings directly behind them as the downtown business district moved into its second stage of development.

It was during this time that the new businesses combined with new light industry and existing retail, office tenants, entertainment, social and government functions to create a dense downtown. Jan Nash noted that, “The commercial district enabled residents to survive as a group. Often referred to as the “heart” of a community, the district was central to the economic health of a town.” It also provided the backdrop for social, political and community events where shared values were forged.³² The 1899 Sanborn illustrates how individual commercial, government and social entities continued to develop in Red Oak. The H.C. Houghton bank at 601 N Third St (the northwest corner of the square) was gone, but the new First National Bank appeared at 501 N Third St (the southwest corner of the square). The Central Hotel at 316-318 E Coolbaugh St had been removed. The livery and feed store behind it were removed and replaced with new buildings. In the buffer around the main commercial area, a new county jail to the west at 106-110 W Coolbaugh St, a new electric light company to the south at 108-110 E Washington, and a new armory to the east at 500 E Coolbaugh St spread government functions further apart. Additionally, the post office moved one bay south on the east side of the public square to 506 N Fourth St. Lodges and halls remained integral to the district; one was located on the third floor of 503 N Third St, another on the second floor of 318-320 E Coolbaugh St, the I.O.O.F. moved into a new building at 501-503 E. Reed St, and the Masonic lodge stayed in the same location at 420-422 E Coolbaugh St.

Red Oak at the Dawn of the Twentieth Century

Although clearly a growing and prosperous town by 1900, Red Oak continued to promote itself in an attempt to continue that trend. In 1901, the Red Oak Commercial Club, with the assistance of the Red Oak Express newspaper, published a promotional book, Red Oak at the Dawn of the Twentieth Century. In it, locals described a thriving town heavily reliant on the surrounding agricultural community, but interested in developing manufacturing interests. Besides its location on the Burlington Route, it was a pleasant place for a business owner to raise a family, a place where workmen could live inexpensively, and where sufficient power could be obtained from the local electrical plant to run a substantial operation, if necessary.³³ Using existing factories as examples, the book describes T.D. Murphy's Calendar Company, Replogle's Mill, the Red Oak Pottery Works, the Kerrihard Company, and the Red Oak Greenhouses, and several others.³⁴ A handful of these were located within the district, including T.D. Murphy's Calendar Company (408-410 E Coolbaugh St), several cigar factories (317 E Reed St, 208, 216 and 308 E Coolbaugh St) and two carriage factories (100 E Coolbaugh St and 515 N Third St).

Employing between 150 and 200 people,³⁵ the factories helped to support Red Oak's economy and provided patrons for local merchants. Employees had plenty of variety to choose from in the downtown core. They could select from 3 dry goods stores, 4 millinery shops, 6 clothing stores, 4 shoe stores, 8 grocery stores, 2 general stores, 4 jewelry stores, 5 drug stores, 3 hardware stores, 4 implement dealerships, 3 furniture stores, 3 meat markets, 3 liverys, 2 laundries, 3 weekly newspapers, 2 lumber yards, 4 hotels, 3 coal dealers, 2 book stores, 3 photographers, 8 restaurants, 8 barbers shops, blacksmiths, 2 harness shops, and 2 plumbers.³⁶

Business establishments in new buildings included the C.A. Niemeyer and Titus Bement Cigar Factory at 208 E Coolbaugh St, Red Oak Laundry at 207 E Coolbaugh St, Frank J. Reifel's Clothing at 304 E Coolbaugh St, and Feed, Hay, and Chop Mill at 215 E Reed St. While names of the architects and builders for these buildings have been lost, prominent architects for more public buildings during this period are known. They include the Omaha firm of Fisher and Lawrie, who designed the Armory in 1899, and a facelift to the H.C. Houghton Bank in 1901, as well as the Chicago firm of Patton and Miller, responsible for the design of the Carnegie Library.

As with previous fires and economic downturns, just as commerce was thriving in Red Oak, several further disasters struck. On April 24, 1902, the town's largest fire occurred, heavily damaging or destroying those buildings located on the south side of Fountain Square, and including the Houghton Bank on the southeast corner of the square.³⁷ Total losses were estimated at $200,000. For those buildings that were not completely destroyed, a number of reconstructions that occurred in the immediate wake of the fire utilized the foundations and some elements of the fire-damaged buildings. Examples include the Hysham building (318-320 E Coolbaugh St) and the Iowana Theater & Recreation Parlor (312-314 E Coolbaugh St), which utilized the storefront arrangement of their predecessors. Many reconstructions flattened the facades, eliminating projecting bays and lowering and straightening parapets. One of the most noticeable examples of this was the Houghton Building at 400-402 E Coolbaugh St. From a two-and-a-half story raised basement masonry building with wall gables, turrets and projecting bays, this building transformed into a three-story Italian Renaissance block. Its tenants however, remained consistent. Snider and Rouse barbers, the Red Oak Real Estate Company and R.T. Will dentist all moved back in after the reconstruction.

Two months after the fire, on June 8th, the town received 3.75 inches of rain in a deluge that caused Red Oak Creek, along the southern edge of the district, to rise 25 feet above its normal level, washing away one of the town's lumber yards, closing the town's electric plant, and washing out two bridges. In all, the flood caused thousands of dollars' worth of damage to buildings and goods and slowed the ongoing reconstructions.

During this same period, significant changes took place along the railroad line. Over a course of two years, Burlington constructed a second track across southern Iowa, removing level grade crossings while flattening and straightening the track to create a faster, safer, and more economical route.³⁸ As a part of this effort, they constructed a new depot along the tracks, south of the downtown core. Completed in 1903, the Late Victorian building served 18 passenger trains and 3 mail trains per day. In addition to passenger waiting and freight lading areas, the interior included restrooms, offices and a café.³⁹

The response to the disasters and railroad development shows a healthy, thriving business community. During the early 1900s, significant construction can be seen in the south end of the district between Fountain Square and the rail lines. The three-story Beardsley Opera House at 406-408 N Third St was completed in 1909 for $40,000 and became the site of many high school graduations. This was preceded slightly by the two-story Johnson Brothers Grocery Store building next door and the two-story C.W. Runberg Harness and Saddlery across the street. All of these buildings continued the trend seen after the 1902 fire of simplifying the construction and concentrating on flatter masonry details, such as pilasters, dentil courses, stone bands and flat parapets. Accompanying these buildings was the Cottage Hotel at 111 W. Coolbaugh St, a coal storage depot, a feed store, a bottling works, the expansion of the lumber yard on Coolbaugh Street and several other businesses.

The building was converted from a furniture store into an automobile showroom and repair shop. Conversions like this were common for early automobile dealerships. Reprinted from the Red Oak Express.

In another significant change for local commerce, the 1908 Sanborn map was the first to document buildings associated with the newly booming automobile industry. Two automobile garages appeared; an existing building at 219 E Reed St was converted from an agricultural implements store and another at 417-419 E Reed St was converted from a furniture store. Both buildings are extant, although the facade of 219 E Reed St has been incorporated into 601 N Third St. More intact period features remain at 417-419 E Reed St; the brickwork on the second story and the metal overhang are particularly noticeable.

In the coming decades retailers would have to learn how to catch and maintain the attention of those zooming by at higher speeds who were able to travel further distances to meet their needs, therefore increasing the number of competing stores. By the 1914 Sanborn, automobile garages were scattered throughout the district and included the partial conversion of two of the larger livery in town, the livery at 100-106 E Coolbaugh St and the livery at 618-622 N Third St. The garage at 219 E Reed St was still in business. Other buildings converted to garages at this point include 423 E Reed St, 209 and 211 E Coolbaugh St and 217 Washington. Also, for the first time new garage buildings were constructed. These were located at 200-202 E Reed St and 407-409 N Fourth St (non-extant).⁴⁰

Red Oak in World War I and the Post-War Depression

The outpouring of effort across the nation during World War I, making munitions, growing food, and sending troops to fight, took both material and labor resources away from general commerce. In Red Oak, most downtown businesses made do while friends, relatives and neighbors fought in the war. However, before the United States entered the war and construction at home was stifled, three businesses constructed new buildings. Lyman J. Botts, Auburn Car Sales, at 200 E Reed St, the Petty Auto Company at 206 E Reed St and B.A. Gregory's furniture store at 210 E Coolbaugh St were all new additions to the edge of the downtown. The two automobile businesses were simple single-story masonry buildings with large display windows to highlight the automobiles inside.

Other types of commercial buildings were receiving facelifts and additions; several designed by well-known regional architectural firms. E. S. Dodds was hired by the Masons and the Masonic Lodge at 420-422 E Coolbaugh St increased its building height to a total of four stories and received a facade renovation that simplified its appearance, removing much of its Italianate detailing. George Prinz renovated the H.C. Houghton Bank for its second time, increasing its footprint and altering the windows, and Harry Lawrie designed alterations to the A.C. Hinchman Building, which were carried out by builder W.E. Rockwell, adding a story at the rear of one bay and refacing the building with a newer brick.

Following World War I, it was difficult for farmers and manufacturers to pull back their up-scaled operations and a glut of products caused both a small recession right after the war and a slightly longer one in the early 1920s. This was combined with high unemployment as markets attempted to deal with returning troops. Locally, between 1910 and 1920 the population of Red Oak rose from 4,830 to 5,578.

The recession was noticeable in Red Oak. The lack of new construction or renovation work indicates that local commerce hit a lull during the second decade of the twentieth century. In fact, an examination of the business listings for the buildings in the district shows that while a handful remained steady through this period, many others changed hands. Often new ownership would start a similar business in the same building, for example, Marsh Furniture became T.H. Purdy furniture,

The construction of the new Benevolent and Protective Order of the Elks building in 1925 signaled an end to this stagnation. The Elks building at 519 N First St stands at the east side of the District, two blocks from Fountain Square. Constructed in 1925, the building exhibits several elements of the Jacobethan Revival style, such as projecting bays, a brick body with stone trim, including quoins, and a tall chimney. The Elks Magazine of November 1925 stated:

“Cornerstone Laid for New Home Of Red Oak, Iowa, Lodge

Impressive ceremonies and exercises marked the laying of the cornerstone for the new Home which Red Oak, Iowa, Lodge No. 1304 is building on West Reed Street at a cost of approximately $40,000. Work on the building is progressing so rapidly that the membership look forward to occupying the new Home by Thanksgiving. Plans are being perfected for its dedication on this date, when it is expected that a large class of candidates will be initiated.”⁴¹

Clearly, like many other private and mutual benefit organizations during this period, the Red Oaks Elks were enjoying an upswing in membership, perhaps natural in a downward economy. In the same magazine, a rendering of a second building under construction used similar Jacobethan Revival style elements in its design and many others were listed under construction.

Highway Development, the Great Depression and World War II

As the twentieth century progressed, automobile travel continued to grow in popularity, necessitating the construction of new roads and the expansion of existing ones. On October 26, 1926, the Blue Grass Road became a part of the newly designated U.S. Highway 34, which led east from Council Bluffs and today stretches west as far as Colorado. A few years prior, a smaller highway was constructed that connected Red Oak with Shenandoah, Iowa to the southwest. Historically, when this highway reached Red Oak the route followed N Fourth Street and ran past the east side of Fountain Square. In the late 1920s it was rerouted to Broadway, west of the commercial core. In her MPD Iowa's Main Street Commercial Architecture, Jan Nash notes the effects of such roads all over Iowa:

“On the one hand, freighting in manufactured goods became easier for communities that were not on a rail line, and getting into town to shop became vastly easier for rural residents all over the state. On the other hand, as roads improved in the 1920s and 30s, shoppers from both small towns and the countryside were not limited to their local Main Street. Often they kept right on driving down the road to the next largest town.”⁴²

Thus the highway made it easier for surrounding residents to go into Red Oak for shopping and entertainment, while making it just as convenient to drive through it on the way to Council Bluffs or Omaha.

The interest of local retailers on the impact of roads is evident in the 1926 University of Iowa Extension Division's study of Red Oak commerce, commissioned by local merchants. The study detailed the local market, analyzing “the problems of transportation,” general trading habits, typical problems of merchandizing and purchasing power of the town and surrounding area.⁴³ Despite the good roads that could bring more people to town, the average distance most people traveled to do business was still just 7.8 miles,⁴⁴ leading the researchers to encourage merchants to concentrate their efforts on local residents and not give up a solid local base.⁴⁵

As the highways that ran through Red Oak developed, the number of automobile-related businesses continued to grow and integrate into the downtown. The 1927 Sanborn map illustrated the persistent elimination of liverys in the District, the growth of repair garages and the presence of the first gas stations. The liverys at 406 and 408 Washington were converted to a garage and feed store and the combination livery/garage at 100 to 106 E Coolbaugh St was converted completely into a garage. The feed barn at 618 to 622 N Third St was removed for an automobile storage building while the garage at 211 E Reed St was expanded to 209 E Reed St. Two additions were added to the garage at 200 E Reed St, comprising 204 and 208 E Reed St. The garage at 211 Washington was expanded into the storefront next door and converted to a battery station and the garage at 407 to 409 N Fourth St was still there. Only three former garages were discontinued. The garages at 209 and 211 E Coolbaugh St were converted to stores, while the garage at 421 to 423 E St was listed as fire damaged. Filling stations stood at the southeast corner of N Third Street and Washington, the northwest corner of N Third Street and Washington Avenue, the northeast corner of Second Street and Reed Street, the southwest corner of N Fifth Street and E Reed Street and the southwest corner of Sixth Street and E Coolbaugh Street. Finally, the increased automobile traffic led to a decreased need for overnight accommodations. The Gable House at 500

E. Hammond was removed, leaving the Griffith Inn and Johnson Hotel along E Coolbaugh Street.

The highway development also spurred a flurry of new construction and remodeling in the district in the late 1920s before the Great Depression hit. Construction included the re-facing of the Red Cross Drug Store at 302 E Coolbaugh St, and new buildings for the Spanish Hat Shoppe at 410 N Third St, the gas station at 201 E Reed St, an office buildings at 109 Washington Ave and a restaurant at 211 Washington Ave. While the Hat Shoppe and the Red Cross buildings strove to incorporate popular architectural styles in their facades, the other buildings continued to be more subdued. After all this work in the late 1920s, the effects of the Great Depression took hold of the town and not a single business was able to invest in a new building until 1940, when the Green Bay Lumber Company at 502 N Broadway replaced their original lumber yard.

The pause in new construction then continued through World War II, when once again the war effort took precedence over renovation and new construction for the sake of keeping up with competing retailers. The available labor force in Red Oak changed drastically as many volunteered for, or were drafted into, service. Additionally shifts in production lines meant that many materials and products were in limited supply. In smaller markets such as Red Oak, the upshot of the war was that the limited number of people left on the home front with construction skills were able to focus on building maintenance.

The Golden Age of Capitalism

As men and women returned to civilian life following World War II, the world entered an age of technical innovation, which created an increased number of jobs in fields such as the aviation and television industries. Commercial enterprises took advantage of the improved highway system, large distribution warehouses and innovations in machinery for handling large loads of equipment. This allowed businesses to maintain the high productivity levels they had generated during the war as they retooled their production lines to market their goods to a wider consumer market.

These national trends invigorated Red Oak's economy. So did the locals. The Red Oak Chamber of Commerce worked hard after the war to recruit new industries and businesses to town. Citing again their location at a junction of the main and branch lines of the Burlington railroad and at the crossroads of Highways 34 and 48, the town promoted its' "400 business establishments serving a trade area with a population of 30,000," as well as its two movie theaters, one drive-in, large municipal pool, football and baseball fields, bowling alley, private golf course, three lumber yards, two newspapers, four printing plants, nine wholesale houses, established industries and excellent schools, making it “an almost ideal place in which to live, to work and to enjoy the better things in life.”⁴⁶

While acknowledging that their economy still relied heavily on the surrounding agricultural community, its status as a county seat kept Red Oak strong. Furthermore, industries directly impacted the continuing prosperity of the local economy and Red Oak merchants. Within Red Oak, industries had grown in number and size, employing 1,400 people.⁴⁷ While the Murphy Calendar company remained a significant employer, it was no longer the largest. National Carbon was recruited to town in 1947 by C. Frank Wilson and the Red Oak Chamber of Commerce.⁴⁸ The company found the community progressive, well located along rail lines and with sufficient power to support its plant.⁴⁹ The company quickly established a battery plant, employing 500 people and building a $1.7 million facility on the edge of town.⁵⁰ Other significant employers were still home grown. In 1950, Wilson Concrete's young leader, Charles Wilson, was taking the company in a new direction; manufacturing precast architectural panels. Wilson began forming branch plants in other towns, but kept the company's headquarters in Red Oak.⁵¹ Similarly, around this time the Kerrihard Company began exclusively manufacturing their Ko-Z-Aire furnaces in Red Oak, changing their name and expanding their factory.

Within the District, commerce was booming and its effects could be seen on the downtown facades as businesses vied for attention. Although new construction slowed by the mid-twentieth century, many existing buildings underwent façade modernizations during the late 1940s and throughout the 1950s. As business owners sought to make their establishments more appealing to contemporary tastes, they frequently added new cladding materials such as tile, metal, or stucco; replaced wood window and door surrounds with aluminum, and rearranged door and window openings. At least 30 storefronts were modernized at mid-century, with many of these facing onto Fountain Square. These included J.C. Penney (505-507 N Third St), Doctor's Offices (401 E Reed St), Brown Shoe Fit (320 E Coolbaugh St) and Cole Jewelry (509 N Third St), to name a few. Most renovations gave the buildings a more streamlined appearance and while the majority of alterations focused on the storefronts, a few, such as Don's Tavern, took a more whole-hearted approach to their renovations, creating an entirely new appearance. Its' stylized Art Deco facade stood out among the older Victorian buildings surrounding it, while its new neon sign beckoned to patrons at all hours. Although the local newspaper featured many of these alterations, no architects or builders were credited with the work.

While the majority of business owners in the post-war era concentrated their efforts upon remodeling existing storefronts, limited new construction continued to occur in the District between the late 1940s and 1965. As in the previous three decades, none of this development took place directly on Fountain Square. Concentrations of development can instead be seen in the blocks around Washington and N Third Street, the south side of E Coolbaugh Street between N First Street and Second Street, and the south side of E Reed Street between N Fourth Street and N Fifth Street. The development included a variety of business types. Several were automobile related. In 1947, Home Motor Company, constructed a new building at 111 Washington for its Chrysler-Plymouth dealership. Three years later, the Houghton State Bank developed a Car Park at 100 E Coolbaugh St, to the south of the County Courthouse. Other businesses were service oriented. In 1952, for example, Finest Cleaners went in at 416 E Reed St. Yet others were for professional and financial institutions, such as the Houghton State Bank (116 E Coolbaugh St), whose new building replaced the Johnson Hotel after that building succumbed to a fire in 1964. Altogether they rounded out the services available in downtown Red Oak. With money once again flowing into the economy, these buildings generally exhibited the latest architectural styles and materials. Moderne elements, canted steel supports, flat metal awnings, rounded corners, glass block and concrete block can all be found in these newer structures.

Modern Era

During the 1960s, major changes to transportation were taking place again. Interstates 80 and 29 were designated in 1956 and completed across Iowa in 1972 and 1973, respectively. Thereafter, Red Oak was an hour or more away from the Interstate system. Within Red Oak, changes were taking place as well. In 1965, U.S. Highway 34 was rerouted north of town. This meant east/west traffic could now easily by-pass the historic commercial core of Red Oak. With private automobiles for travel, rail passenger service dwindled and was discontinued in 1971.⁵² Today, freight service to Red Oak stops at just two private businesses, UPS and the Minsa Corporation.

Despite transportation routes now going around Red Oak rather than through it, its status as a county seat and industrial center has helped to keep the local commercial core alive. In 1971, Iowa Governor Robert Ray noted that Southwest Iowa was a growing industrial area.⁵³ Even today, although many industries have been bought out by larger, national chains, a number continue to maintain a presence in Red Oak; Replogle Mill and Four Company has become part of Minsa; and National Carbon Company has become a battery factory for Johnson Controls. One business that has maintained local ownership is the Red Oak Greenhouse. This company was purchased in 1968 by Russ Johnson. At one time the largest greenhouse in the state, it became a regional supplier for plant outlets. Together, these industries have supplied jobs for a large number of local residents, who in turn have supported their hometown commercial establishments, including several long standing businesses that continue to thrive and remain in the downtown core, including the Houghton State Bank, the Brown's Shoe Fit Company, Red Oak National Bank, and Pioneer Mutual Insurance Company. These are joined by long-standing social and governmental institutions, such as the Masonic Hall, the Elks Club, the Post Office, the County Courthouse, the Police Department and City Hall.

Business owners in the District continued to alter their buildings after 1965, although these renovation efforts were minimal. Until recently, changes to buildings were generally limited to maintenance items, rather than sizable renovations undertaken to attract customers. Additionally no new buildings were constructed in the District until the Dental Care building (415 E Coolbaugh St) in 2002.

Conclusion

For over a century, businesses in the Red Oak Downtown Historic District rose and fell through waves of prosperity and distress that are reflected in the successive layers of building materials, architectural styles and forms we see today. After the coming of the railroad in 1869, the burgeoning town acquired increased wealth and status that in turn resulted in the construction of a more permanent, fire-proof building stock. As the decades advanced, successive generations of business owners and civic leaders put their own mark on the downtown, resulting in alterations to extant buildings and construction of new buildings that met the shifting needs and tastes of the population. After 1920, new development slowed and storefront rehabilitations became the norm, emphasizing and unifying the horizontal commercial band at the base of most buildings in an effort to relate to the increasing speed of customers as they drove into (and through) town. By the late 1960s, the Red Oak Downtown Historic District had matured into a blend of architectural styles and vernacular forms that continue to reveal the peaks of its economic prosperity and hardiness through natural disasters.

Criterion A – Social History

Retired Military Men become Local Business Leaders

Military service changes those who serve. The education, discipline, adherence to the chain-of-command, and commitment to both the group and the common goal instilled during training and service stay with veterans long after their period of service is over. It affects how veterans, particularly those in leadership positions, conduct themselves and often the businesses they select for employment. For those who become business leaders, their military service often influences the way they run their businesses. Human resource managers have identified traits such as leadership, dependability, decisiveness, tenacity and comradery as those common to military personnel. Given these qualities, it should be no surprise that currently, while veterans make up just 3 percent of the American population, they make up 8 percent of the CEOs on the Fortune 500 list. These CEOs also serve longer and deliver a stronger performance than those of civilian-led Fortune 500 companies.⁵⁴

Since the Civil War, Red Oak has had a strong association with military history. Its residents have shown patriotism and engagement whenever the country has called them to action. In fact, the town was nationally recognized by the Federal Government, which dedicated a war ship the U.S.S. Red Oak Victory in memory of the sacrifices of the town's citizens during World War II. Across all the wars, those who returned or moved to Red Oak after the conflict ended took their places in local society. Many became local business leaders, contributing to Red Oak's economic success as well as their own. Today, veterans make up 8 percent of Red Oak's population, slightly more than the state average of 7 percent, but they have a significantly higher percentage of veteran-owned businesses than the state average (15 percent and 9 percent in Red Oak and the state of Iowa, respectively).⁵⁵

Civil War Veterans

Over 76,000 Iowans, approximately 11 percent of the state's population, served in the Civil War. While statistics on casualties are relatively clear (13,169 died), the number of veterans is difficult to ascertain for a variety of reasons.⁵⁶ Those injured in the war did not necessarily return. Neither did those with Post Traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD). Others decided to move on, relocating to cities where a war buddy lived, or somewhere new for a fresh start. In Iowa, it was not until the state's 1890 census that a portrait of these veterans was captured. By then, the total veteran population in the state for both sides of the war was listed at 43,328, a statistic that likely under reported Confederate veterans.⁵⁷

Montgomery County, Iowa
County and State

During the Civil War, according to W.W. Merritt, the fledgling Montgomery County contributed a larger percentage of men to the Union cause “than any other county in the state.”⁵⁸ In his 1881 History of Montgomery County, Merritt identified 31 men in the Adjunct General’s records in Des Moines as living in Red Oak at the time of enlistment. This would have been about 15 percent of the town’s population in 1860. After the close of that war, returning Union Army soldiers and veterans who were new residents after the war became a noticeable portion of Red Oak’s growing number of businessmen and community leaders. Although they did not all fight in the same regiment, they shared values and experiences gained through that military service. Of the 100 biographies of Red Oak residents in Merritt’s History of Montgomery County, 30 were Union veterans.

Like those in fledgling towns across Iowa, these veterans were instrumental in giving the town of Red Oak a successful start; the bankers through financing, the capitalists through financing and propagating numerous businesses and the dealers through supplying others’ needs. Many veterans held a position in public office in addition to running their regular business interests. Notable Civil War veterans and their local business associations included (in alphabetical order):⁵⁹

- Marion T. Anderson – Druggist⁶⁰
- Frank M. Byrkit – Vice President and later President of First National Bank (501 N Third St), the only bank not to fold during the Panic of 1873
- Edward M. Carey – Manager of C.H. Lane and Co – machinery and farm implements (non-extant)
- N.A. Cook – Merchant from 1870 to 1879, later partial owner of People’s Telephone, a Red Oak greenback newspaper
- Thomas H. Dearborn – mentee under C.H. Lane, moved to Red Oak with his encouragement, owner of a coal and ice business, City Marshall
- E.A. Harris – County Recorder, Real Estate Dealer, Mayor of Red Oak (1881-1885), Fire Chief (1877-1885), Captain of Company K Fifth regiment I.N.G., started the town library
 - His biography noted that he “has always had faith in Red Oak, and labored to promote every enterprise that would build it up.”
- Alfred Hebard – Real Estate Dealer and Capitalist – Surveyor for the B&M RR, State Senator, U.S. Commissioner from Iowa to the World’s Fair in Paris, part owner in various unnamed businesses
- C.H. Lane – merchant and Capitalist - owner of the Farmer’s Store (501 N Third St), the Lane Block (503 N Third St), Lane Implement Company (various locations), part owner of lumber mill on outskirts of Red Oak, co-founder and first president of First National Bank (501 N Third St)
 - As noted in one of his obituaries, “many of the successful business men of Red Oak got their early business training under Mr. Lane who was an honest and upright gentleman and made a great success of his business and had the confidence of the people of that vicinity.”⁶¹
- Henry N. Moore – President of Valley National Bank
- Henry Harrison Palmer – co-owner of Palmer & Harrison, feed stables and stock shippers
- Reuben Roberts – farmer and secretary of the Mining Company, County Recorder for several years
- Elliott S. Rodgers – Grocer from 1874-1875

World War I Veterans

Approximately 5 percent of Iowa's population (114,242 men and women) served during the Great War.⁶² Of these, 539 were women who had served as nurses.⁶³ As with the Civil War, not all soldiers returned home. In addition to casualties and those who needed permanent care, some decided to remain in the service, others decided to stay in Europe, while others moved to the city of a favorite base or of a comrade, or somewhere they had always dreamed of settling down. Of course, all that movement also meant that some veterans from other locations moved to Iowa. While most troops had returned home by 1920, the 1920 Federal Census did not gather any veteran information; however, the 1925 State Census did. It reported 69,722 veterans throughout Iowa (approximately 3 percent of the state's population).

The patriotic fervor of Red Oak and Montgomery County continued into World War I. Two hundred and fifty Red Oak men fought on the front lines with Company M in World War I. Little information is available on the veterans of WWI who came back to run local businesses. However, utilizing the enlistments of Company M and information on veterans collected in the Federal 1930 census, there were 129 veterans of World War I in Red Oak in 1930. At 2 percent of the town's population, this was just slightly below the state average. Compared to Civil War veterans, who were discharged as the town was forming, these veterans came home to experience several decades of struggles, including the faltering agricultural economy of the 1920s, the Great Depression and World War II. Despite these difficulties, a number of veterans became successful local businessmen. Those who left their mark on the Red Oak Downtown Historic District included:⁶⁴

- George Bolt – Shoe Business⁶⁵
- John Butler – Butler Grocery Store 1930-1941 (400-402 E Coolbaugh St)
- Ivan Elwood – Clothing and Drygoods Store (4th and E Coolbaugh St)⁶⁶
- Graham Hendricks – Print Shop Owner
- Alvin and Carl Johnson – Johnson Brothers Groceries 1934-1945 (401-403 E Reed St)
- Clarence Larson – Halbert-Larson T.V. Service 1955 (213 E Coolbaugh St)
- George Ray Logan – Bookkeeper and Assistant Manager of Hawkeye Lumber Co.⁶⁷
- Ross Muterbaugh – Auto Shop Owner
- Robert Petty - Petty Auto Company 1915-1917 (206 E Reed St)
- Oliver Reiley - Reiley & Reiley, Physician and Surgeon 1896-1917 (2nd floor, 405 E Reed St) and 1934-1950 (411-413 E Reed St)

World War II Veterans

Iowa sent 226,638 men and women, 9 percent of its population, to serve in World War II. Those who survived were just as prone to relocating as those who served in World War I. While many returned home after the war, a significant number remained in military service or in Europe, went into long term care, or moved to the city of a favorite base or dreamed-of destination. Their return was coupled with GI benefits that assisted them in finding new careers and coincided with an economic boom that lasted until the early 1970s, affording many opportunities for personal economic success. Overall, approximately 10 percent of Iowa's population were veterans of WWII in 1950.

⁶⁴ Unless otherwise noted, the following list compared names in the Company M roster and the 1930 Federal Census with known businesses in the Site Inventory Forms compiled for each building in the Historic district. The link between these individuals and the business is assumed. Further, those veterans who owned or operated businesses under another name were missed.

Montgomery County sent over 1,100 men and women to serve in World War II. Despite the large number of casualties from Red Oak during this war, including 45 in the Battle of Kasserine Pass alone, many soldiers did return to take over family businesses or start new ones. Other veterans moved to town after the war and made their mark here as well. Of the 700 biographies included in the IA Sesquicentennial 50th Anniversary WWII Military History, 103 service men and 4 service women lived, worked or retired to Red Oak. Collectively, their mark was made through the renewed growth and prosperity of Red Oak after the War. Local business leaders who were veterans of this conflict, and their contributions included:⁶⁸

- Duane Ayres – Manager of Supply Store on the square, then Milledge Hardware (516 N Fourth St), later owner of Green Parrot Restaurant (506 N Fourth St)
- Richard E. Cleveland – Vice President of Montgomery County National Bank (321-323 E Reed St)
- Harold Cozad – Owner and operator for 42 years of Jessen’s Clothing Store (306 E Coolbaugh St)
- Horace Deemer Houghton – President of Houghton State Bank (501 N Third St) from 1952 to 1958
- Ivan C. Lungren – owner of Morris Paint Store (421 E Reed St) in 1949⁶⁹

Armed Conflicts Affected the Built Environment

The significance of the Civil War, World War I and World War II are reflected in Red Oak’s physical environment, even though the town was not directly involved in any war. Before the soldiers shipped off to war and after they returned, Fountain Square frequently played host to celebrations of military pride, serving as a backdrop for sendoff and homecoming parades. Fountain Square also served, and continues to serve, as a central organizing element for commemorative markers, honoring those who gave their lives fighting for their country and putting their sacrifice on display at the heart of this community.

The Armory also provided a place within the downtown for men to gather and train before deployment. After its dedication in December of 1896, the building provided space for both municipal events and National Guard activities. The building was expanded in 1908, raising the roof and constructing a second floor to provide space for a property room, offices for officers, a club room and an assembly room. Occupied by the National Guard until 1953, when it was replaced by a modern facility on the edge of town. This building then converted to use as a furniture store and continues to represent the association of the National Guard with Red Oak’s downtown.

The contributions of successful veteran businessmen are also represented in the commercial buildings themselves, running the gamut from small building alterations, to storefront and interior renovations, to the construction of completely new buildings. As noted in the lists above, this contribution by war veterans includes 14 extant buildings in the District.

Conclusion

Initially, Fountain Square developed as a commemorative site in which to display memorials to those who fought and did not return. These former residents now make their mark on Red Oak in the form of historic memorials to local heroes from all U.S. wars between the Civil War and the Korean Conflict. The armory, a block off the square, provided a place for the local National Guard troop to practice and meet while at home. Reinforcing this, the buildings in the Red Oak Downtown Historic District have done more than act as backdrops to the honorific displays of patriotic support occurring on or near the square. They served as places where successful veteran owners ran their businesses. Many buildings were tangibly changed, in part or in whole, during the veteran owners' tenure, strengthening their physical association with this local demographic. Together, the buildings and objects associated with local veterans provide a substantial physical link to past national events and represent trends seen across Iowa from 1865-1965.

Photographs

Submit clear and descriptive photographs. The size of each image must be 1600x1200 pixels (minimum), 3000x2000 preferred, at 300 ppi (pixels per inch) or larger. Key all photographs to the sketch map. Each photograph must be numbered and that number must correspond to the photograph number on the photo log. For simplicity, the name of the photographer, photo date, etc. may be listed once on the photograph log and doesn't need to be labeled on every photograph.
