Summary Paragraph

Scribner Town Hall is located in Scribner, Nebraska, a small Dodge County community (2000 pop.971) located on the western side of the Elkhorn River. Dodge County is a productive agricultural area with flat to rolling plains dissected by the rich valleys of the Platte and Elkhorn Rivers. Scribner was platted following the cardinal directions between the river and the Freemont, Elkhorn and Missouri Valley Railroad (FEMVRR), which run parallel in a northwest/southeast direction. Light industrial, agricultural and warehouse buildings line the west side of the tracks, an area historically accessed via Horton Street. The old Scribner Town Hall is a two-story rectangular, brick building built by local contractors and builders in 1906-07 to house the "water and light station and the village hall," according to hand-written minutes from a November 30, 1906 meeting of the Village Board. Located at the terminus of Howard Street on an irregular block, Scribner Town Hall was placed at a central location near the downtown business area and adjoining what was a major railroad property.

Narrative Description

Scribner Town Hall is a two story, brick building with a low hipped-roof covered with asphalt shingles. The east-facing façade reveals several Romanesque Revival details include brick corbelling and round-arch second level windows, the former of which is considered a character-defining feature of the style. The arches of the window openings are embellished with three rowlock courses of brick capped with a projecting header course that creates a modest hood. A pressed tin cornice with brackets adorns the peaked pediment of the façade, further linking the building to the style. Four brick pilasters located on the corners and on the face of the symmetrical façade divide the building into three bays. An iconic bell tower with the original fire bell is centered on the ridge of the roof near the front of the building. The foundation of Scribner Town Hall is brick.

The functional organization of the building is apparent on the façade. The first story was used as a fire hall and waterworks while the second story housed an office / cloak room, kitchen and large meeting hall. The large, elongated second-story windows were primarily used for light and ventilation in the summer. They are the original, one-over-one, double-hung windows, however, the arch of the upper light has been covered on the outside with wood paneling. The lower story of the building is dominated by three bay door openings. Originally, these were wood-paneled double doors that swung outward; however, they have been replaced due to age and requirements. The fire truck was only a hand-pumper at the time the building was built, and one door was enlarged to accommodate larger fire trucks. The door located in the northern bay was altered with a walk-in door to accommodate an office.

The higher quality buff-colored brick of the façade transitions to the common brick of the rest of the building in a quoin-like pattern at the corners. The side elevations of the building are similar, although the northern side of the building contains a fourth garage door opening near the front of the building and brick exterior chimney near the back. The large bay opening has been filled with paneling and two man doors. All windows have rounded lintels created with two rowlock courses of brick and concrete sills. First story windows are two-over-two light, double-hung sashes indicating the utilitarian nature of the ground-level. Rectilinear one-over-one, double-hung windows fill the second-story windows were town meetings and social functions were held. A door on south elevation offers access to the jail area at the back of the building.

The rear elevation of the Scribner Town Hall has a small, one-story, shed-roofed, brick addition attached to its rear entrance with a pipe sticking out near the top. This was likely related to the water tower behind the building, which was torn down sometime after 1994. On the interior of the main building a large pipe projects though the transom above an original door at this location. Also of interest are the two barred windows on the south side of the first story. These indicate jail cells on the interior of the building.

Interior

The building has always been entered from the north elevation, which leads to the main staircase. On the first story this area has been portioned off into office space with wood paneling and a dropped ceiling. Inside this entrance to the left is a restroom, which was the only public restroom in town for many years. The remainder of the first floor is unfinished space with exposed brick walls and a frame and concrete joist system. A large room with brick and flush horizontal board walls is located on the north side of the first story. At one time there was an artesian well here which ran continually. The room now houses a heating unit and generator that run the electricity to this building and the fire hall across the street. At the back of the building on the south side is a bricked off area accessed by a heavy paneled door. The door leads to a hallway with two jail cells to west. Each jail cell has a window, and one still contains its original cot.

The main wooden staircase with original rail and beadboard wainscoting leads to a second-floor landing with the kitchen and office / cloakroom to the east and the meeting hall to the west. The landing is finished with plaster and beadboard wainscoting and contains a wood ladder leading to an attic opening. An Art Deco pendant light with opalescent glass hangs from the ceiling. The meeting hall is entered through original wood paneled double doors with a transom. Like all the interior doors on the second level, this entrance is embellished with a hardwood architrave and plinth blocks. The crown of the architrave is decorated with billeting. Windows surrounds also follow this basic motif. The meeting hall was remodeled after 1960 with wood paneling on the walls and linoleum on the floor. However, none of the original woodwork (baseboard, chair-rail, door and window surrounds) was altered or covered during the remodeling. In addition, early pendant lights from the 1930s or 1940s are still present. Despite the paneling and floor covering, the meeting hall still retains its open floor plan and sense of scale.

The kitchen and office / cloak room are accessed from the second-story landing through single paneled doors with their original transoms. The kitchen appears to have undergone extensive remodeling in the 1930s or 1940s. The chrome cabinetry hardware and the pendant light fixtures all are indicative of the period. During this era, a passageway linking the kitchen and meeting hall was created over the stairs. The kitchen walls and ceiling are finished in original plaster, but a tile-like siding was put on the lower portion during the remodeling. Of the three upstairs rooms, the small office / clock room in the south east corner of the building is the closest to being original with its original woodwork, flooring and finishes. However, a small bathroom was added to the southwest corner of this room, most likely in conjunction with the remodeling of the meeting hall.

Condition and Integrity

Despite alterations to both the exterior and interior of the Scribner Town Hall, the property still readily expresses its multiple historic functions, which were essential to the community's governance, safety and social life. Furthermore, the building does retain a large percentage of its original design, materials and workmanship, and many alterations occurred during the period of significance. The building does suffer from some condition issues. It is in need of a new roof, repairs to the bell tower, windows, painting and tuck pointing. A City Hall Renovation Fund has been set up through the Scribner Area Foundation at the Scribner Bank and is currently accepting donations.

Period of Significance (justification)

The period of significance begins in 1906 with the construction of the building and lasts until 1960, the end of the building's historical significance as defined by the National Register of Historic Places. It served as the location of repeated activities associated with local government and community gathering throughout this period.

Statement of Significance Summary Paragraph

The Scribner Town Hall is eligible for listing in the National Register of Historic Places at the local level under Criteria A for its association with repeated activities related to local government and social history in the city of Scribner, Nebraska. The Scribner Town Hall historically housed city offices, the fire station, the jail, utilities offices, and a well-used meeting hall with a kitchen. As the site of countless official meetings and community gatherings during its period of historical significance (1906-1960), this building played a significance role in the governance and social history of Scribner. In addition, Scribner Town Hall is representative of the importance placed on creating a symbolic and tangible expression of local government in Dodge County, as evidenced by an unusual occurrence of this property type within the county.

Narrative Statement of Significance

Scribner was platted on the western banks of the Elkhorn River in 1870 by the Fremont, Elkhorn and Missouri Valley Railroad (FEMVRR) along their line from Fremont, Nebraska to Norfolk, Nebraska. In 1874, Scribner had only 50 residents but by 1890 there was a population of 664, thanks in part to the town's selection as a junction between the main line of the FEMVRR and its branch line to Albion, Nebraska.¹ Scribner continued to grow in the next decades with the construction of a new depot, school, library, and the addition of telephone service by 1902. Clearly, Scribner was destined to survive its early period of settlement. By 1906, the town was ready for a multi-purpose municipal building capable of housing even more services for the growing citizenry. The village clerk recorded the following actions by the Scribner Board of Trustees at their November 30, 1906 meeting:

After a full and through discussion of the motion, the roll was called upon the question: Shall the contract for building a water and heat and light station and village hall be let to Kellner & Woerth for the sum of 5,490.00, showing the following result. Those voting in the affirmative were Diels, Turner, Koplin, Preiss and Ross. Five votes in [favor, and in] the negative none. The chairman thereupon declared the question carried and contract so awarded.²

At the next meeting of the Village Board, the Chairman ordered the, "the street between City Restaurant and Railroad Park, and alley back of the building occupied by the telephone co. cleared of trash," in anticipation of construction. In addition they approved the "double acting Triplex Pump," for their new waterworks after a presentation by a Mr. Gardener of the Rumsey Manufacturing Co.³ Local contractor Elmer Huber began excavation and soon Scribner had a multi-functional municipal building with an attractive and classically-inspired brick façade.

There may have also been an element of competition in the building's construction, as Scribner witnessed nearby Snyder and North Bend put up attractive town halls in 1903 and 1905, respectively.⁴ In fact, a 1994 reconnaissance-level survey of Dodge County revealed the presence of seven extant town halls built between 1895 and 1930 in Dodge (c.1895), Hooper (1914), North Bend (1905), Scribner (1906), Snyder (1903), Uehling (c. 1895) and Winslow (1929).⁵ According to the Nebraska Historic Resources Survey and Inventory (NeHRSI), no other county in Nebraska currently has so many extant historic town halls. This suggests that having a tangible expression of municipal government was important to the identity of Dodge County's smaller communities. The Romanesque Revival / Renaissance Revival style selected for the town halls in Scribner, Snyder and North Bend was certainly meant to evoke a sense of community permanence and pride. Like Scribner, most of Dodge County's town halls also included an iconic bell tower. In Scribner, the location of the town hall also added to its prominence. Positioned at the terminus of Howard Street, the Scribner Town Hall overlooks both Main Street and the railroad tracks.

Despite the symbolic edifices of Dodge County's town halls, they were largely utilitarian buildings. Of the seven historic town halls still extant in the county, four are two story buildings with a fire hall on the first story, including Scribner Town Hall. The first story of Scribner Town Hall was always filled with equipment, with the south side dedicated to the fire department and the north side serving as the city's pump house for power and heat generation.⁶ For years, the town's water tower was located immediately behind Scribner Town Hall, until it was torn down sometime after 1994. The building served as the fire hall and waterworks until the 1960s when a new waterworks building was constructed immediately south of the nominated building and a new fire hall was built across the street.

The two small jail cells at the back of the building occasionally held persons charged with a crime by the local constable. The magistrate was then called to sentence or 'fine' the person for whatever infraction took place. Sometimes these 'prisoners' were only kept overnight to prove a point. Other times they were transferred to the county jail in Fremont. However, the jail was not always used for its intended purpose. One former city employee once related how during the depression years he would allow men who were 'riding the rails' through town to stay overnight in the jail and provide them with a meal.

In contrast to the first floor, the second floor of the Scriber Town Hall was a finely finished space. The large, well-lit meeting hall offered plenty of space for the Scribner Village Board to hold their monthly meetings. More importantly, perhaps, the meeting hall and adjacent kitchen provided much needed public space for the citizens of Scribner for organizational, social and recreational gatherings. The second floor was used for years by the public for Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts, insurance, chamber of commerce, baseball, municipal band, lodge and church meetings as well as wedding receptions, anniversaries, birthdays, open houses, Halloween costume parties, feeds, firemen's meetings and smokers, and so on. The facility was used by the community for miles around. In 1980 a new auditorium was built near the county fairgrounds (1980) and this building was no longer in demand.

Conclusion

As early as 1974, Scribner Town Hall was already being recognized for its historical significance. In that year the Dodge County Historical Society passed the following resolution:

The Dodge County Historic Society invites attention to Dodge County's three beautiful and interesting town halls. It thanks Scribner, Dodge and Snyder, where these town halls are located, for having preserved them. The Society hopes these three towns will further preserve the halls in the future as building in which the citizens of this area can take pride.⁷

Clearly, town halls were and continue to be significant to the identity of Dodge County's communities and Scribner Town Hall is among the best representation of their importance. Scribner Town Hall also served the community well as a utilities station, fire station, seat of municipal government, and community gathering place during its period of historical significance (1906-1960). It is therefore significant at the local level under National Register Criterion A in the areas of government and social history. The City of Scribner, who still owns the property, hopes to preserve Scribner Town Hall so that it will continue to serve the town as a gentle reminder of its beginnings and its past.

Boundary Description

The nominated property is located on an irregular triangular block roughly bounded by the original FEMVRR right-of-way to the southwest, 3rd Street to the east and Howard Street. It is surrounded by blocks 11 (north), 10 (northeast) and 3 (east), Original Town, Scribner, Dodge County Nebraska. The nominated property includes only the northern half of this un-platted triangular block.

The nominated property is rectilinear shape. Starting at the north east corner of the property the boundary follows the southern right of way of Howard Street until it reaches the right-of-way of the original right-of-way of the FEMVRR Railroad, a distance of approximately 125 feet. Then the boundary proceeds approximately 125 feet southeast along the railroad right-of-way until reaching a point intersected by a line approximately three feet south of the south wall of Scribner Town Hall. The boundary then proceeds approximately 100 feet due east along a line approximately three feet south of the south wall of Scribner Town Hall before reaching the western right-of-way of 3rd Street. The boundary then proceed approximately 100 feet due north along the western right-of way-of third Street until returning to the original point.

Boundary Justification

The boundary includes all of the area historically associated with Scribner Town Hall that has not been compromised by construction occurring after the period of significance. The southern boundary was drawn between the nominated building and a 1960s-era waterworks building that also sits on the triangular block. The boundary was extended to the FEMVRR railroad to included land behind the nominated building related to the city's waterworks.
