DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The house at Bedford Plantation is a modest one-story frame farm home with a long front gallery set beneath the unbroken slope of a gable roof. The long, low silhouette, the single-pile plan without hall, the set-back gallery, the plastered front wall combined with clapboard sides and back, and the brick-nogged, heavy-frame construction are typical regional developments from Creole antecedents. The full assemblage of such characteristics is typical of lower Louisiana but unusual in Mississippi.

The house faces northwest from the top of a gentle rise close by the north-east side of a gravel road leading from the Cannonsburg community southeast through Adams County. It is surrounded by a lawn dotted with crepe myrtle and cedars, the whole set among pastures and pine forests on the eighty-three-acre tract termed the "Homestead . . . part of Bedford Plantation" in an 1881 survey map of the property.

The interior contains three front rooms, each twenty-one feet square by fourteen feet high, set side by side across the front of the house, with chimneys on the common walls. A long back room, twelve feet deep and possibly once an open gallery, extends across the center room and a portion of the end rooms but is terminated at each end by a small "cabinet" room of the same construction and detailing as the main rooms. An early-twentieth-century gallery, now enclosed, occupies the entire width of the house at the back. The space beneath each main end room is excavated to form a brick-walled cellar room.

Interior and exterior trim is in the late Federal style used in the Natchez area during the late 1820s. The three nearly identical mantelpieces are especially fine essays in that style. Moldings are used both on the interior and exterior to crown the bases and to form backbands to the door and window casings. Simple batten doors, some with transoms, are used throughout except in the center bay, where front, back, and intermediate doors are in the Greek Revival style with two vertical, molded panels. These stylistically later doors were originally equipped with mid-nineteenth-century hardware.

The integrity of the Bedford Plantation house is lessened but not seriously impaired by several changes made during the first half of the twentieth century. These changes entailed the replacement of the clapboards, the removal of the facade stucco, and the reworking of the front gallery. More recently, space has been found for the kitchen and baths in the "cabinet" rooms and in one of the end rooms. The earlier changes are being reversed as part of a long-term restoration project, of which the current phase is the restoration of the front gallery to its former appearance.

Of the outbuildings, only the schoolhouse survives. It is located about one hundred yards north-northeast of the house. This one-room frame structure is covered with board and batten walls and a gable roof. There is a small gallery on the front and an attached shed on the rear. The structure apparently dates from the second half of the nineteenth century.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Combining construction techniques and features more commonly associated with the Creole building tradition in Louisiana, the residence at Bedford Plantation is a well-preserved example of a vernacular architectural form indigenous to the lower Mississippi Valley but rarely constructed in Mississippi. It is one of the few documented structures in the state employing brick-nogged, heavy-frame construction. The house, which stylistically dates from the late 1820s or early 1830s, was the seat of planter Thomas Hall's 6,318-acre Bedford Plantation, which he began assembling in 1831 (Probate Record: Real Estate, 3:120). The property was the site of a Civil War skirmish on October 2, 1864, involving Colonel Embury D. Osband's troops as they moved from Vicksburg to Natchez (O. R., 1,39:575-576).

Thomas Hall, first mentioned in Adams County in the 1830 census, was born in Mississippi and died in 1856, leaving an impressive estate of over 5,500 acres to be divided among his four heirs. The house and "dower" tract of 1,431.95 acres were left to his wife. In 1880 the acreage surrounding the house was reduced to an 81.75 acre "homestead tract" to satisfy the creditors of Hall's daughter and son-in-law, Sallie T. and Edmund Ogden (Deed Book XX:748-50). The 1880 homestead tract remains intact today under single ownership except for .73 acre on the opposite side of the public roads.
