DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Equinox House is located along the west side of Route 7 across from the village green and the cluster of civic, religious, commercial and residential buildings which form the neucleus of Manchester, Vermont; County seat of Bennington County.

The two white, three story clapboarded main buildings of the Equinox House are rectangular in plan with the long sides being parallel (north-south) to the main street and the village green. The buildings are connected by an enclosed wooden bridge at the second story level. The east-west corridor framed by the building ends and the bridge form the visual center of the composition, creating considerable architectural excitement with the limited vista afforded of the interior courtyard.

The north main building resulted from the incorporation of an earlier house and store which stood on the site and was opened as the "Equinox House" in 1853. This building has a flat roof. A steeped wood tower is located at each end of the building. The structure contains the hotel office and desk, located behind a series of arcaded windows, on the south side of the main hall. To the north of the hall is the reception room, a large room recessed below the level of the main hall. The reception room is supported by round, fluted wood and cast iron columns. Extending west from the main building is the dining hall wing which contains the lounging, ball and dining rooms. The main dining room is perpendicular to the west end of the wing and has a barrel-vaulted ceiling.

The south main building began as Munson's Tavern, an early 19th century hostelry. This original building underwent a series of enlargements and expansions until it evolved into its present form. It was known as the "Taconic" (hotel) when the Equinox House opened directly to the north and was unified to the latter by the bridge in 1880. The building has a gabled roof divided into several levels. A large wing extends westward from the building. Both the main building and the wing are divided primarily into hotel rooms.

Both the north and south buildings have the same general scale and massing. The entire composition is unified by a twostory veranda which extends across the street side elevations of both buildings. The colonnade supporting the roof of the veranda is composed of tapered fluted wood round columns along the south building and plain square wood columns along the north building.
