DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Godfrey Ludwig House of Waldoboro dates from about 1800, and is a Cape Cod style dwelling of brick construction, with gable roof, granite foundation and two internal end-chimneys. The facade is 5 bays wide with 6/6 windows flanking a central entrance. Under the eaves an unusual row of dentils is found across the entire width.

The entrance consists of a single doorway with recessed sidelights. of the house are 3 bays wide.

A gable-roofed frame ell with clapboard siding extends from the rear of the house.

Internally, the most remarkable detail is hinged panels which separate the central hall from two adjacent rooms. These could be opened to create one very large meeting room, and they were installed at an early date when the house doubled as a Methodist meeting house on the Union Circuit early in the 19th century.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Included in the Muscongus, or Waldo Patent, Waldoboro, then known as Broad Bay, was first settled between 1733 and 1740 by Scotch-Irish and German immigrants brought in chiefly by the influence of General Samuel Waldo, the patentee. Largely destroyed in the early 1740's during Indian conflicts, the settlement was revived after the Treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle in 1748. In 1742-53, General Waldo's son, Samuel, visited Germany and succeeded in obtaining about 1500 settlers from that country, giving to Waldoboro a Germanic flavor peculiar to itself. In 1772, a German Lutheran church was built in the community which still stands (N.R. 5/19/70).

In 1780, Jacob Ludwig became the first member of this German population to serve as Representative to the Massachusetts General Court which reflected his position of leadership in the community. He was a shrewd, thrifty, intelligent, and ambitious man, entirely self-educated. From the first he had realized that Waldoboro would become an English community and he had set himself, in consequence, to a mastery of the language, law, practices and ways of English life. This knowledge made him a leader among his people and in the 1790's he was the community factotum. Childless himself, he became devoted to his nephew, Godfrey, son of his brother Joseph, and spent long hours training him in the lore and learning which he had acquired. In 1799 he presented his protege with a generous piece of good farmland on which the latter proceeded to build the sturdy brick cape of ample size.

Though Godfrey never achieved public recognition equal to that of his uncle, he was a widely respected prosperous farmer who, after 1820, became a strong supporter of Methodism to the extent that his house became a stop for circuit riding ministers to conduct services. The Union Circuit, of which the Ludwig House was a part was the earliest established in eastern Maine and extended from the town of Union southwesterly through Waldoboro as far as Round Pond.

The use of the house for services resulted in the construction of its most interesting feature. Erected as it was on a central hall plan with end wall fire places, there was no room large enough for meetings. Consequently the hall walls were rebuilt with hinges along the ceiling so that they could be swung upward into the two front rooms thus combining them, along with the hall, into one large room occupying most of the floor area of the main part of the house, the kitchen being in a small ell.

This white painted brick cape with its black painted trim stands out as a land-mark recalling Waldoboro's German heritage as well as the early Methodist circuits in eastern Maine.
