DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Set back from the main road on a small knoll and approached by a curving dirt drive along the far edge of the village green, the Sudbury Meetinghouse stands on an imposing site remarkably unchanged in exterior appearance from the time of its construction in the early 1800's.

Erected in 1807, the Sudbury Meetinghouse is a large, rectangular-shaped, two-story frame structure, of post and beam construction, with a projecting and pedimented vestibule and a third story tower rising from the gabled roof. The roof is sheathed with asphalt shingle. The exterior walls are covered with white-painted clapboards. The two-story projecting pavilion, or vestibule, contains two round-headed doors and a central doorway, now clapboarded shut decorated with wooden pilasters and a simple doric entablature. Above is a large palladian window with 20/20 sash and 6/8 sidelights. In the square tower is a semi-circular louver. The top of the tower is crowned by gothic embellishments, presumably added at the time the town took responsibility for the structure during the 1850's.

Both the western and eastern facades are devoid of ornamentation, with the exception of a modillion cornice which extends the entire perimeter of the eaves, including those of the central pedimented projecting pavilion, on the front elevation.

The windows of both the eastern and western elevations have 6/6 sash, with the exception of the lower story window of the southernmost bay on the western elevation, which is a 20/20 sash variation, found on the windows of the second-story of the southern elevation, including the palladian window, complemented by 6/6 sidelights.

On the rear elevation, lower story, are paired 20/20 windows with the exception of the northwesternmost window which has 6/6 panes. A central palladian window in the second story dominates the rear elevation, and is flanked by two side windows of 6/6 sash. A small lunette now painted, is directly above the rear palladian in the gable end.

Although an Asher Benjamin plate, from which the Sudbury Meetinghouse was built, illustrates a building with a steeple, the current meeting-house contains only the previously mentioned gothic embellishments. A reminiscence contains the following observation: "the interesting letter of Mr. Cheney's further states: 'there was a large steeple on the front end of the house, and when I was a small boy six or seven years old, they began to feel afraid that the wind might blow it over onto the house, and that they had better take it down, so they hitched a rope to it, and I think they had a yoke of oxen to help pull it off. I remember well hearing the terrible crash when it struck the ground.'" I the description notes further, "when the house was made it was with square pews with seats on three sides. The pulpit was on the north end high enough for stairs to go into it, and a place under it to keep the Sabbath School Library. The gallery at the south end was occupied by the singers and musicians."2

The original interior has been altered extensively, dating from 1849 when the town received the "priviledge" of occupying the first floor of the meetinghouse for town meetings. During the 1850's the second floor was completely renovated to house the religious congregation, while the lower story was altered for town meetings. In October, 1854, the pews were removed and the box pews replaced by the current scroll pews, grained to imitate maple. The centennial anniversary (1907) of the church notes further change: "a complete record calls for some notice of change made in recent years. The pipe organ and choir gallery which once were in the front of the house have been removed. The straight stairway has taken the place of the former winding stairs, the pulpit platform has been lowered and extended. The window back of the pulpit has been closed. The present windows (6/6) are comparatively new. One row of side seats has been removed, considerable plastering has been done, the wood work painted, and new carpeting put on the floor. With the exception of the "new" carpeting, the interior has remained intact since the above renovation."

In 1976, a new one story kitchen wing was added to the eastern side of the building, constructed in wood, and clapboarded. The wing constitutes an intrusion, although its location on the least exposed side, tends to minimize its effect on the 1807 structure.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Sudbury Meetinghouse is architecturally significant because its builder, Charles C. Stewart replicated exactly, Asher Benjamins Country Builders Assistant, Plate 33, "A Design For a Meetinghouse", originally published in 1805 in Greenfield, Massachusetts. The Congregational Church of Sudbury was first organized in 1803 and the church building was erected in 1807.

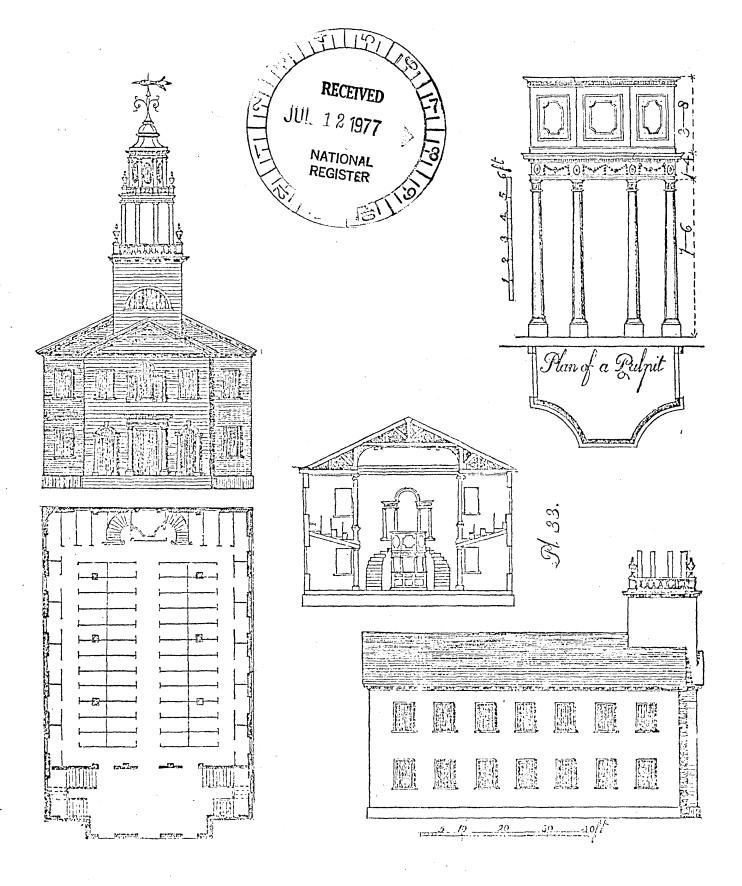

It is not surprising that a Vermont carpenter builder would have turned to Benjamin, since Benjamin had worked in Windsor, Vermont, designing the old South Congregational Church in that town in 1798. With the printing of the Country Builders Assistant in Greenfield in 1805. The federal style, promulgated in New England by Charles Bulfinch, was assured of a wide dissemination, to which the Sudbury Meetinghouse was to prove a noteworthy example, with its virtually unaltered exterior facade.

Although the gothic spires date from an 1850's alteration, it is noteworthy that the alteration was made by the town, at a time when the building was being renovated to serve its dual function as a religious meetinghouse and a town hall, a partnership still retained to this date. Thus, the historic concept, known since colonial times, of church and state functioning within the same edifice is preserved within the Sudbury Meetinghouse.
