DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

In 1871, Expedition Island was covered with cottonwood trees and undergrowth. In a small clearing, Powell and his men outfitted their four boats, and practiced their steering and signalling. They left the island May 22, 1871.

In 1975 the island had been divided in two by current action. The northern section, the larger and, undisturbed, is still covered with dense foliage. The southern section contains the sites of Powell's encampment and debarkation. The interior has been made into an open, grassy mall surrounded by a gravel drive which circles most of the island. At the southeast end a deteriorating community hall stands near a parking area and outdoor rest rooms. Foliage still covers the banks of the island, screening visitors from the adjacent town of Green River. New housing developments on the south bank of the river, however, run right up to the edge of the bluffs and are unscreened.

Green River seeks to remodel its community center, but proposals to remove the driveway from the southern island and put footpaths through the undisturbed northern one have met with little support.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Expedition Island was the starting point for the two expeditions down the Green and Colorado Rivers led by Maj. John Wesley Powell in 1869 and 1871. On these expeditions Powell completed the exploration of the last, large, unknown land area in the Continental United States. No conclusive information has been found to indicate the precise campsite or embarkation point of the first expedition, but the second camped on Expedition Island and left from there May 22, 1871.

Penetration of the unknown Colorado by Powell and his crew opened up a new era for the nation. New concepts of conservation, reclamation, forestry and water management, geological and geographical surveys, and a whole new and scientific approach to the western lands ensued.

BIOGRAPHY:

John Wesley Powell was born in New York, but his father, a Methodist-Episcopalian minister, soon moved his family to Ohio. As a young boy Powell became interested in natural history, and he associated with learned men in the field. He began making river trips—down the Ohio, the Illinois, the DesMoines, and Mississippi Rivers. During these trips he learned boat-handling and how to read a river's current.

Powell was a high school teacher when the Civil War broke out, although he never received a college degree. Powell joined the Union Army as a private but was an officer within a few months. At the Battle of Shiloh a Mini ball tore through his right arm and the doctors could do nothing but amputate. Powell then returned to teaching in natural history, but soon grew restless. In 1867 and 1868 he organized two scientific expeditions into Colorado, where the unexplored Grand (now Colorado) River captured his imagination. When he learned the new transcontinental railroad was to cross the Green River in southwestern Wyoming he decided his next expedition would begin there.

The 1000 mile journey began in May 1869 and was filled with incredible hardship. Fifteen days after leaving Green River one of their four unwieldy boats was wrecked, taking one-third of their rations and all of bowell's notebooks with it. A fire one week later completed the destruction of their mess kit. Heavy rains gradually spoiled the remaining rations. Three men were killed by Indians when they left the party to travel overland. The others continued and on August 30 arrived at the mouth of the Virgin River where they found three Mormons fishing. The canyon had been conquered, and the last unknown area in the United States had been trayersed.

Although much of the scientific data that was to be gathered on this trip was lost, it would be regained by the 1871 expedition. The journey had profound effects on the future course of science and public policy in the west.

During this trip Powell began to study the nature of arid country and saw clearly that unless land policies and political and social institutions were changed, the fragile ecology of the region would break down disasterously. As Director of the newly formed U.S. Geological Survey from 1881 to 1894 he fought hard for a sane land and water-use program in the arid West. No real success crowned his efforts until a few months before his death in 1902. In that year President Theodore Roosevelt signed into law the Reclamation Act, creating what is now the Bureau of Reclamation. Since 1902 the Bureau has built 259 dams and the value of crops irrigated with Reclamation projects now comes to about $1.8 billion each year.

Expedition Island thus commemorates not only the exploration of the last unmapped region in this country, but also the prescience of the explorer-scientist who prepared the foundation for many of the Nation's modern concepts of land and water conservation.
