Summary Paragraph

The San Diego Athletic Club is a free-standing, twelve-story, concrete building located in the downtown core area of San Diego on a steeply sloping lot with a multi-directional slope. Two of the building's façades, the east and north, are street facing and fully visible, but the west and south property line façades are visually blocked by neighboring buildings. The building was designed in an Art Deco Ziggurat and Late Gothic Revival style in 1928, was used as the San Diego Athletic Club from 1928 to 1964, and was converted to office use in 1969-1970. Most of the interior historic fabric and some of the exterior historic fabric was removed during this conversion. On the first floor, individual rectangular windows were heavily modified to create wider openings that extended upward to the underside of the two-story arched windows above. New trim around the arched windows of the third floor extended to the ground giving the appearance of one continuous three-story window. Most of the original steel windows were replaced. The second floor balcony above the entrance, the first floor wrought iron window grilles, the horizontal band at the second floor line, and the fire escapes were removed. The horizontal faux stone scoring of the first floor façade was in-filled. However, the majority of character-defining exterior features above the third floor were retained and the ziggurat design of the building was unaffected. The building has retained its historic integrity in terms of location, design, setting, materials, workmanship, feeling, and association.

Exterior:

All twelve floors of the building are constructed of board-formed, poured-in-place concrete, which originally was left exposed and unpainted. The decorative stone features, which included friezes, balconies, sill spandrels, and horizontal bands, were painted a shade darker. The east elevation consists of a central tower bay, with the main entrance, and two equally sized adjacent bays; the north elevation consists of one undivided flat surface. The first floor fenestration originally consisted of twelve relatively small multi-lite windows on the east façade within the two side bays and six similar windows on the north façade. Above these twelve windows, within the side bays on the east façade, are six large arched original windows that extend from the second to the third floor and above the six windows on the north façade were six large arched original windows at the same location. The 1969-1970 renovation visually extended these twelve arched windows, which have painted decorative metal muntins separating the glass panes and decorative horizontal mullions separating the glass units, down to the first floor by extending the arched windows surrounds to the ground and installing modern single pane plate glass windows with a similar but applied muntin pattern. At the top of the third floor windows, affixed to the top horizontal mullions, were miniature sculptural figures, several of which remain. At the base of the second floor windows, a decorative cornice circled the two street elevations of the building, but almost all of that cornice was removed in the renovations. Remnants remain on the central bay below the fourth floor and two of the second floor windows.

The fourth floor windows on both elevations were the rectangular casement style with transoms. They remain. All the windows above the fourth level are fixed, single pane, and unadorned except for the top floors. A balcony, supported by carved brackets, graces the front façade's eighth floor center windows. Decorative bands or sculpted friezes with variously designed plaques mark the roofline indentations at the fifth, ninth, and twelfth floors. The horizontal decorative band at the fifth floor contains intermittent medallions with a male profile. Beneath the twelfth floor windows are circular designs cast in cement, mimicking pointed or gothic windows, complete with center trefoils. At the parapet, a heavily decorated frieze exhibits variously designed plaques, divided by figureheads in cement. The roof is flat with parapets topped by a decorative design. A metal fire escape is present at the rear of the south elevation serving the sixth through twelfth floors.

The building has smooth concrete wall surfaces, changing scale, and vertical decorative concrete elements, including pilasters and roofline parapets. Vertical columns with incised detailing and stylized capitals define the spaces between the window openings and add a strong vertical detail to the overall design. The building has a sub-basement, basement, and twelve stories of office spaces, and an attic and mechanical penthouse on the top of the structure. The sub-basement occupies the southern three-quarters of the building footprint, the basement through fourth floors occupy the full building footprint. The set-backs step from front to back as well as from side to side thus giving the building its ziggurat shape. The fifth through eighth floors occupy a cruciform shaped footprint that is set back from the lower floors on the north and south sides of the building. The ninth through twelfth floors form a small rectangular tower that is set back from the lower floors on all sides.

The twelve-story building has retained most of its exterior character-defining features but has undergone significant interior changes resulting in a loss of interior historic fabric. The building originally contained athletic facilities, assembly, and dining spaces. The building now contains offices on each floor. A 1928 historical photograph of the building is included with this nomination.

Between 1969 and 1970, the interior was converted to offices on all floors. All vestiges of the interior historic fabric were removed with the exception of the central curved stairwells and areas of decorative painted ceilings on the third and fourth floors. All other interior elements were replaced with offices around the perimeters, drop ceilings, room dividers, and new rest rooms and hallways. Several levels of roof deck occur on the building on the fifth, sixth, ninth, and twelfth floors as setbacks occur. Most of the roof decks are accessible only through windows or large sliding doors. All of the roof decks have gravel over built up roofing.

The building has a total of four internal stairwells. Stair #1 is the original internal stair that is part of the service core. This is the only stair that runs from the sub-basement all the way to the elevator penthouse atop the twelfth floor. It features concrete steps and a curved plaster guardrail with an embedded wood rail on top. Stair #2 is at the northwest corner of the building and is the older style of metal pan stair with a guardrail of flat metal bars and it extends from the basement to the fifth floor. Stair #3 is a narrow stair centered on the west exterior wall. It extends from the sub-basement to the fourth floor. Stair #4 is located at the southwest corner and extends from the basement to the sixth floor. From the sixth floor, this stair transitions to an exterior staircase and from floors six to twelve, it is an external steel staircase.

The building contains four elevators. Elevators #1 and #2 are the primary passenger elevators. They are paired together in the middle of the building footprint in the service core. The elevators have stops starting at the basement level and going up to the twelfth floor. Elevator #3 is located in the northwest portion of the building and extends from the basement to the fourth floor. Elevator #4 is located on the west wall and extends from the sub-basement to the fifth floor. These elevators were installed in the 1980s during one of the building remodels.

Rehabilitation and Planned Alterations:

The proposed rehabilitation of the building's East Façade will retain its exterior appearance with the exception of the central bay's first floor level entrance, where the 1928 appearance will be reconstructed or replicated pursuant to the original plans and photographs. This work will include the installation of cast stone and iron ornament (faux railing) balustrades at the new side windows, decorative, non-structural supports below a new faux balcony, an applied plaster ornament and cast stone ornamental screen surrounding the entrance, a metal bas-relief medallion with "SDAC" above the entrance doors, replicated entrance doors, a faux second floor balcony fronted by a decorative cast stone screen modeled on the eighth floor balcony, and applied plaster ornamentation below the faux balcony. This work is intended to replicate the original entrance elements shown in the 1928 photograph.

The proposed rehabilitation of the building's North Façade will retain its exterior appearance with the exception of the installation of three new window openings and windows, compatible with the existing windows, on the fourth floor level at the west end, where the former windowless handball courts were located. The proposed rehabilitation of the building's South Façade will retain its exterior appearance with the exception of the installation of two new window openings and windows, compatible with the existing windows, on the fourth floor level at the west end, where the former windowless handball courts were located. No other alterations are proposed to these two Façades or to the West Façade. Graphics illustrating the rehabilitated East and North Facades are included in the Figures attached to this nomination.

Integrity:

The 1928 building remains in its original location. It retains its original design elements that create the form, plan, space, structure, and style of the property. Although the first floor fenestration and central entrance elements were altered during the building's 1969-1970 conversion to office use, the building's historic exterior features are substantially intact and the overarching significance of the exterior of the building overcomes the adverse effect of these later alterations.

The setting remains the business and civic core of Downtown San Diego. The building is surrounded by newer high rise buildings representing the business growth and development of the City that was projected by the Club's founders almost ninety years ago.

The integrity of the vast majority of the building's original materials has been retained. The quality of the original workmanship has been maintained since the building's historic exterior features are substantially intact.

The building retains its 1928 form, plan, space, structure, style, and appearance. The Late Gothic Revival and Art Deco elements combined in the ziggurat form represent the aesthetic and historic sense of the early 1920s when this building was conceived and constructed.

The building was constructed by the business and community leaders in San Diego in the early twentieth century as a social, business, and community club that would enhance life for all San Diegans through the formation of friendships, business partnerships, and the promotion of San Diego's culture and climate. It succeeded in that role for the next forty years and played a part as San Diego became a major Southern California city. The building is associated with the historical development of this modern city.

Statement of Significance Summary Paragraph (Provide a summary paragraph that includes level of significance, applicable criteria, justification for the period of significance, and any applicable criteria considerations.)

The San Diego Athletic Club is eligible for the National Register of Historic Places under Criterion C at the local level of significance as an excellent example of Late Gothic Revival and Art Deco architecture in the ziggurat form and as the only example of this style in the City of San Diego. The building embodies the distinctive characteristics of both styles and has maintained its character defining features and architectural integrity. The Athletic Club was constructed by the business and community leaders in San Diego in the early twentieth century as a social, business, and community club. It proposed to enhance life for all San Diegans through the formation of friendships and business partnerships and the promotion of San Diego's culture and climate. The period of significance is 1928, the year construction was completed. The Club successfully served these functions from 1928 through 1964 as no other institution has, during that period or since. As the architectural design evolved to include elements from both the Late Gothic Revival and Art Deco styles, it represented the majesty of important civic buildings from the previous century and the modern design elements of the new century. Fortunately, alterations to the lower floors made during the conversion of the building to office use did not adversely affect the overall architectural significance of the exterior of the building. The property continues to represent 1920s social and civic history and architecture.

Narrative Statement of Significance (Provide at least one paragraph for each area of significance.)

The San Diego Athletic Club was envisioned in 1924 to provide a social and athletic facility for the San Diego community. Founded by prominent members of the San Diego business community, the club operated for over four decades and offered a wide range of social functions that facilitated the business and cultural affairs of the City of San Diego. William H. Wheeler, Frank W. Stevenson, and Ilton E. Loveless were chosen as the architects for the building's design in 1924. According to published information about this project, William H. Wheeler served as the Supervising Architect.¹ None of these men had ever designed a building in the Art Deco style. Their design palette had included Mediterranean-influenced styles, Spanish Colonial Revival, Late Gothic Revival, and Classical styles. While the original design concepts for the Athletic Club centered around the Late Gothic Revival style, including a steeply pitched Normandy roof, as the vision of the building took shape and plans for its future role in San Diego's community and business life evolved between 1924 and 1928, the design concepts shifted to a style more expressive of the goals of the founders. As more and more Art Deco Ziggurat style buildings were under construction, and the popularity of Art Deco design expanded, the architects responded to the influences and reshaped their ideas about the appropriate stylistic choices for the Athletic Club. Soon the Gothic arch windows were limited to the top of the building, the Normandy roof was eliminated, and a tower section imitating a battlement was removed from the drawings. The design became more streamlined, windows were more linear, and the step pyramid or ziggurat form became the dominant element of the overall design. This design evolution is illustrated in the published articles on the building included in the Figures attached to this nomination.

Gothic Revival:

Gothic Architecture originated in France in the Twelfth Century, existed in Western Europe through the middle of the Sixteenth Century, and was characterized by the building of great cathedrals, a progressive lightening and heightening of structure, and the use of the pointed arch, the ribbed vault, and a system of richly decorated fenestration.² Gothic architecture grew out of the previous architectural genre, Romanesque, which had already established the basic architectural forms and units that were to remain in slow evolution throughout the Medieval period. The widespread introduction of the pointed arch brought about the stylistic change that separates Gothic from Romanesque, replacing the form of small openings with a form where light triumphs over substance. The practically universal feature of Gothic architecture is the pointed arch, but other characteristic features are pinnacles, battlements, and window tracery.³

Gothic Revival has been defined as a movement aimed at reviving the spirit and forms of gothic architecture originating in the late Eighteenth Century but flourishing mainly in the Nineteenth Century in France, Germany, and England and to a lesser extent in the United States.⁴ In Early Gothic Revival architecture, 1820 to 1860, there may be fewer of these features and they may have been made of simple materials and patterns. For churches, the most common plan was basilican with a steeple at the entrance end. Other buildings could have been symmetrical or asymmetrical in plan and massing. Steep pointed gables were the rule.⁵

In High Victorian Gothic Architecture, 1860 to 1890, the standard features of Gothic architecture were employed but with different effects. The High Victorian Gothic was polychromatic and the variegation was produced by the use of combinations of structural or facing materials, such as different types of stone, alterations in window arches, or differing brickwork patterns. Details, such as moldings, tracery, or carved ornament are all heavier. The effect is a coarser appearance as opposed to the fragility of the Early Gothic Revival. Rooflines are more complex, often with a profusion of gables and dormers, top heavy effects are common.⁶

Late Gothic Revival buildings, 1890 to 1915, are quieter and smoother in design than the earlier styles. The silhouettes are simpler and the top heavy effects are no longer present. Late Gothic Revival churches were substantially built of masonry with tracery of stone. The craftsmanship is superior and the detail is more varied in a single building. Three American architects at the turn of the century, Ralph Adams Cram, Charles Wentworth and Bertram Goodhue, were leaders in the Late Gothic Revival movement, re-emphasizing the perpendicular elements that had been the main source of the Early Gothic Revival style. The 1903 Military Academy at West Point was a militarized version of the Perpendicular. The Late Gothic Revival form found expression in other educational buildings at Bryn Mawr, Princeton, Duke and the University of Chicago in the early 1900s. Steel skyscrapers, including the 1913 Woolworth Building in New York and the 1925 Tribune Tower in Chicago, also popularized this style.⁷ The verticality of the Late Gothic Revival that was suitable for skyscrapers and their large window areas made it practical for other commercial buildings, such as the San Diego Athletic Club.

The San Diego Athletic Club's design retains a number of Late Gothic Revival treatments: the decorative Gothic arches in clusters of three on the twelfth floor, the attached shafts at the twelfth floor parapet and, between the eighth and ninth floors, vertical moldings at the twelfth floor windows and the original second to third floor windows, rooflines terminated by small pinnacles and castellated battlements at the ninth and twelfth level parapets, and other decorative elements including shields, trefoils, and medallions. These elements have been seamlessly incorporated into the dominant Art Deco Ziggurat form that emerged.

Art Deco:

Art Deco is an eclectic artistic and design style that began in Paris in the 1920s and became popular throughout the world by the 1930s. The style is marked chiefly by geometric motifs, streamlined and curvilinear forms, sharply defined outlines, often bold colors, and the use of synthetic materials. Its name is shortened from that of an Exposition of modern and decorative arts held in Paris, France in 1926.⁸ In Art Deco and Moderne styles, simple cubic forms and flat surfaces are emphasized for their modernity. Art Deco (1925-1933) ornament has a pronounced verticality and is mechanistic and linear in quality. Favored motifs are faceted surfaces, zigzags, chevron patterns, and octagonal shapes. Windows are grouped in bands and spandrels are expressed as continuous horizontals.⁹ The style influenced all areas of design, including architecture and interior design, industrial design, fashion, and jewelry. At its best, Art Deco represented elegance, glamour, functionality, and modernity. It was considered to be an eclectic form of elegant and stylish modernism. Art Deco embraced influences from many different styles of architecture in the early twentieth century, including Neoclassical, Cubism, and Modernism. The Art Deco Ziggurat design concepts drew inspiration from Mesopotamian, Egyptian, Greco-Roman, and Meso-American precedents. The discovery of King Tutankhamen's tomb in Egypt in 1922 resulted in an intense interest in ancient archaeology. Ancient peoples believed that the ziggurat style buildings connected heaven and earth as they reached into the sky. The publication of drawings, photographs, and other materials from archaeological excavations at exotic sites around the world inspired architects, designers, and artists of all genres. The revival of travel after the end of World War I also allowed people to travel the world to see these important sites and receive inspiration from these ancient cultures.

The first ziggurats were temple-towers in Sumerian and Assyrian architecture built in diminishing stages of mud brick with buttressed walls faced with burnt brick, culminating in a summit shrine or temple reached by a series of ramps. These are thought to be of Sumerian origin dating from the 3rd millennium BCE.¹⁰ Today, the term describes a terraced pyramid with each story smaller than the one below it. Art Deco skyscrapers may have complex groupings of rectangles or trapezoids. Sometimes two contrasting materials are used to create subtle bands of color, a strong sense of line, or the illusion of pillars. The logical progression of steps and the rhythmical repetition of shapes suggest ancient architecture, yet the style also celebrates a new, technological era. From skyscrapers to movie houses and government buildings, to modest business exteriors, homes and gas stations, the style was modified to fit specific design concerns and the functional needs of the subject building.

According to Gebhard and Winter, "Certainly, next to New York City, Southern California exhibits, even today, more examples of the Art Deco (Zigzag Moderne) than any other part of the country. Bullock's Wilshire (1926) by Parkinson and Parkinson is the best remaining example of Art Deco in the area, but there are literally hundreds of examples in the downtown sections of Los Angeles, San Diego, Pasadena and even Santa Ana."¹¹ Other Los Angeles examples include the Eastern Columbia Building (1930) and many other smaller, lesser-known examples along Wilshire Boulevard and other important business corridors in the city. Examples of the Art Deco Ziggurat building style are located in Argentina, Brazil, Cuba, Germany, India, Indonesia, London, Paris, Russia, Shanghai, Spain, and United States. In New York, the Chrysler Building (1928-1930), the Empire State Building (1931), and Rockefeller Center (1931) are prime examples of the Ziggurat style. These buildings are icons in the American landscape. The San Diego Athletic Club Building (1928) is the only example of this architectural style in the ziggurat form constructed in San Diego. Despite interior alterations, the building remains as a prime example of the architectural trends shaping the country in the 1920s and the desire of the founders of the Club to create an elegant, modern building that reflected their vision of San Diego's future growth and development.

San Diego's leading citizens and businessmen, led by Colonel Ed Fletcher, envisioned a social, business, and community club that would enhance life for all San Diegans through the formation of friendships, business partnerships, and promotion of San Diego's culture and climate. In 1924, when the initial idea for the club was formed, America was recovering from World War I and the future looked bright and promising. These men planned to lead San Diego firmly into the future possibilities offered by the twentieth century. The design of the building was planned to be a concrete example of their sense of vision, modernity, and San Diego's future showcased in an elegant building that brought the past together with the present to create a future for San Diego.

History of the San Diego Athletic Club:

The San Diego Athletic Club was created in 1924 by prominent members of the San Diego business community to provide a wide range of functions. Athletic clubs became popular in the United States in the early twentieth century and became important institutions in the life of the city. They fostered business connections and social interaction that helped development of the cities. When a group of leading business men of San Diego met at the suggestion of Colonel Ed Fletcher, for the purpose of discussing the erection of a modern athletic club in San Diego, Fletcher noted the success which attended other athletic clubs in various parts of the country.¹² That group was composed of G.A. Davidson, George W. Marston, Claus Spreckels, Milton A. McRae, Frederick M. White, J.W. Sefton, Ralph E. Jenney, Richard T. Robinson, Jr., and Colonel Ed Fletcher, the leading figures of the commercial and civic core of San Diego. As a result of this meeting, the San Diego Athletic Club was incorporated on February 11, 1924. Most of the original incorporators became members of the first Board of Directors.

The Board sold memberships in the Club. The proceeds from those sales and the monies that they were able to borrow enabled them to pay for the purchase of the lot, the construction of the building, and its furnishings. A 100 x 150 lot had been purchased on the southwest corner of Sixth and A Streets. The Building Committee employed architects William H. Wheeler, Frank W. Stevenson, and Ilton E. Loveless.

Newsletters were published throughout the four year construction of the new Athletic Club that provide an ongoing chronicle of the physical, social, and cultural development of the Club. The letterhead of the Club newsletter included the phrase – “A Social, Commercial and Family Club.” The Club was not a men’s only club. From the beginning, the Club was seen as a way to bring the family into the larger social and athletic developments of San Diego. The Club newsletters continually refer to the building as a “home” for members and their families and no effort was spared in the construction or development of the Club to emphasize that concept.¹³

During the early years of development of the San Diego Athletic Club, in order to increase the potential success and the financing of the Club, the membership campaign was expanded. In 1926, plans were made for a street parade in conjunction with the big ground-breaking ceremony on July 31st. The parade was scheduled for noon in the downtown core area for maximum exposure to thousands of people working in the local businesses. Men prominent in the state and the nation, including the Governor, Senators, Congressmen, County Supervisors, Mayor and City Council, and officials from other athletic clubs, participated. “Moving pictures” were taken of the event.

¹² Horace E. Rhoads, “History of the San Diego Athletic Club,” El Caravel, March 1928.

The location of the new Club was in the commercial and civic core of San Diego, as reported in its January 1927 newsletter:

Sixth Street is gradually coming into its own. The character of the Street is undergoing a radical change. Witness the new John D. Spreckels building, for example. Now comes another fine structure – the San Diego Trust and Savings Bank Building on Sixth and Broadway. Both of these are fine companions for their neighbor, the Club Home on Sixth and A Streets. The Club represents faithfully the spirit of the newer and Greater San Diego. This means that when the Club is completed and occupied it will be the headquarters for the representative citizens of this splendid city... A house set on a hill cannot be hid. ...

In the June 1927 newsletter, the intended use of the upper floors was discussed:

The sleeping rooms, of which there will be ninety-six, will enable the members to offer the hospitality of San Diego to out-of-town guests. Moreover, the club will mean not only a down-town home for members but also a San Diego home for out-of-town friends of members. The service of the club will be in keeping with the building and the furnishings and equipment. Good food will be served amid congenial surroundings in the dining room, grill and women's dining room. Throughout the entire building will be a quiet, unostentatious service.

An Editorial in the August 1927 newsletter stated that:

Soon the San Diego Athletic Club will be functioning one hundred percent. It will be not only the center of athletics, but also of civic, business and social activities. Moreover, it will play a vital role in the city's history, providing one place where business may be mixed with recreation and pleasure and where men can be brought together. The Club will be a Club for men. But wives, daughters, and mothers will have privileges also, with their own lounge and dining room and their own exclusive entrance. Reciprocal relations will be established with Athletic Clubs in other cities.

An Editorial in the September 1927 newsletter commented that:

... But keep in mind that the Club "is more than just an organization of representative business and professional men, operating for social and athletic purposes. Remember that it is a great potential force in the life of San Diego; that as time passes it will assume still greater influence in this community. This will mean that the San Diego Athletic Club will be more than a Club, that it will be a vital public institution, comprising in its membership the best brains and citizenry of this city.

In the October 1927 newsletter, readers were reminded that:

The location of the club's home is of itself a real feature, being right down town; handy and yet not in a noisy part of the city; just right for dropping in for a loaf, something to eat, for exercise, a swim or to meet friends or associates.

Interior Elements:

The arrangement and decoration of the interior spaces was of prime importance to the members and every effort was made to create not only a functional building but a structure that offered a variety of amenities for members, their families, and out-of-town visitors who were using the exchange privileges of the Club. The building was designed to offer a full range of sports activities, spaces for a wide range of community and business events, dining and dancing and hotel accommodations.

All the interior furnishings and supplies were from local San Diego businesses. Many of the members of the Club owned businesses that furnished goods for the actual construction of the Club or the interior décor, dining services, uniforms, and equipment. This was also seen as another positive aspect to membership and instilled a sense of pride in the members that their goods and services were used to create such a beautiful building for San Diego's enjoyment.

Interior Décor:

The Club members included the cultural and social leaders of San Diego's business and arts communities. The décor of the interior reflected the cultural activities of the members, their interests, and the artistic and cultural trends of the period. A concerted effort was made to acquire furnishings and art that would not only enhance the building's interior for the pleasure and edification of the members, but also aid in advancing the cultural development of the city. Many fine paintings were donated to the Club by members, including ones by prominent local artists. A large oil painting of Colonel Charles Lindbergh, the Club's first honorary member, and "a representative American," graced the wall of the main lounge.

Social Activities:

As soon as the Club was opened, it became the social and athletic center for San Diego. A wide range of all types of athletic activities were offered for men, women, and children. The San Diego Athletic Club was represented in competitions of various indoor and outdoor sports and the Athletic Committee had sixteen subcommittees: baseball, basketball, bowling, boxing, fencing, football, golf, gymnastics, handball, rowing, swimming, tennis, track, volleyball, wrestling, and yachting. Teams were formed for both men and women in a range of sports. Classes for swimming lessons for children, competitive swimming teams, and fitness classes were offered for all ages. The newsletters were filled with helpful articles on health, fitness, the proper way to exercise, and listed the accomplishments of the various teams, classes that were being offered, and updates to keep members fully informed as to the athletic activities of the Club. The Club offered a wide range of facilities and accommodated everything from social lunches, guest speakers, weddings and receptions, dinner dances, to any type of business or community meeting that a member would like to hold on the premises. A variety of clubs within the Club were formed to meet the needs of specific groups of members and allow for more interaction and connection between members.

Later Developments:

The Great Depression affected the entire nation all during the 1930s, resulting in major changes to American life. The Club faced severe financial difficulties which lasted through World War II but it rebounded after that and continued to serve as an important social and athletic center for San Diego until the mid-1960s. Changing social conditions and economic downturns in that period made the operation of the Club prohibitive and eventually it was closed and the building was sold to outside concerns in 1964. For over forty years, the San Diego Athletic Club had served as a cohesive force in the community.

Historic Context of the San Diego Athletic Club:

After World War I, San Diego was a small city on the California coast at the border with Mexico. Two important things happened during that war: the Panama Canal had been completed in 1915, making San Diego the first American port on the Pacific coast to be reached by world-wide shipping, and, in 1916, the United States Navy had identified San Diego Bay as a most desirable port for west coast naval activities. In the early 1920s, San Diego's business and civic leaders foresaw an incredible future for the City because of these two events and the foundation of this Club was intended to foster that future.

While San Diego's land use patterns and its built environment developed over time, as is normally the case, there was a dramatic shift from what was required to serve the Spanish Mission environment to what would be required to serve a modern American city. The first settlement of San Diego by the Franciscan missionaries in the late 1700s was at the mouth of the San Diego River and the San Diego Bay. By the late 1880s it became clear to Alonzo Horton and others that the more desirable area for the city core was the New Town area surrounded by the waterfront on two sides in a protected Bay. Without a reliable railroad connection, the sea was the only option to provide trade and prosperity to the San Diego region. From the 1870s until the turn of the century, the area now known as the Gaslamp Quarter, near the waterfront, was the economic heart of the city. After the turn of the century, as the city grew and prospered, new development occurred north of the Gaslamp Quarter, above Broadway, the main east/west street, transferring the City's business and civic core to this vicinity.

By 1924, when the founders of the San Diego Athletic Club planned their facility, the area north of Broadway, where all the prominent buildings of the first two decades of the twentieth century had been built, was the logical location for the Club that would become the social home for the business and civic leaders of the city. Even better, the Club would be situated on a hill, providing views of the prosperous city around it.

The Club property needed to have three characteristics in order to be considered an important representation of its property type and content. The first characteristic for a property of this nature was a location that would provide convenient access for the members of the business, civic, and philanthropic communities. In the 1920s, the vast majority of the City's population worked and resided in or near the downtown core.

The second characteristic was superior facilities. The Club provided state-of-the-art facilities that included two solariums, four handball courts, a gymnasium with a reinforced concrete running track, a swimming pool, a main lounge, a main dining room, a grill, a Ladies' dining room, Ladies' lounge, a separate Ladies' entrance, and 96 guest rooms, all within a twelve story Art Deco ziggurat style building unlike any other in the city on a hill overlooking downtown and the waterfront. There was nothing comparable to it then or since.

The third characteristic was architectural quality. The Club hired some of the best architects of their day, with experience in a variety of styles, and then worked with those architects to design an architectural "program" for their needs and to do so in a manner that combined Late Gothic Revival design elements used for monumental buildings in the past with the more modern Art Deco style in a Ziggurat form, resulting in the only example of ziggurat architecture in the City. A successful Club property requires an architectural statement that is initially outstanding and of long-lasting quality that can support intense use year round and can be remodeled to address changing conditions and club practices. The Club's architecture met that test for almost forty of the City's most dramatic years.

The building was sited in the historic downtown core, which would be appropriate for the major social and athletic club serving prominent members of the business community. Immediately south of it was the now lost 1924 Pantages, later Orpheum Theater, the most prominent theater of its day that covered a half block. Within close proximity was the U.S. Grant Hotel (1910), the Spreckels Theatre Building (1912), the Holzwasser-Walker Scott Building (1913), the Balboa Theater (1924), the Spreckels Office Building (1926), the El Cortez Apartment Hotel (1927), the Medico-Dental Building (1927) and the San Diego Trust & Savings Building (1928), all of which, with the exception of the Spreckels Office Building, are now listed in the National Register of Historic Places. The San Diego Athletic Club was similar to the other buildings in the downtown core in terms of siting, scale, material, and construction. Only its design was unique.

The San Diego Athletic Club represents the historic context of the economic post-war 1920s resurgence, its embrace by the business and civic leaders of San Diego during that period, and their selection of an architectural design/style for their Club that was completely new, one that represented the future and not the past.

The San Diego Athletic Club building retains its importance as a 1920s skyscraper surrounded by new skyscrapers, in the long-standing business and political core of San Diego, with a design that reflects the architectural history of the Art Deco movement with Gothic Revival elements. The use changes to the interior of the building have not had a significant impact of the building's appearance or its ability to represent the era in which it was constructed. The property represents the themes of 1920s social and civic history and architecture.

The San Diego Athletic Club building was designated as City of San Diego Historic Resource #685 in 2004 as “an excellent example of the Art Deco ziggurat skyscraper architectural style with Classical and Gothic overlay, and was designed by Master Architects Frank Stevenson and William Wheeler, thus qualifying under HRB CRITERION C (Architecture) and D (Master Architects).”

Colorado River Development Appears Promising

UPPER BASIN GETS BEHIND BOULDER DAM

Building and Membership Plans Feature S. D. Athletic Club Meeting

Rear view of proposed home of San Diego Athletic Club, which the organization plans to erect at Sixth and A streets.

Associated Press
WASHINGTON, March 16.—Storm clouds that have threatened to eclipse the legislative pathway of the Boulder Canyon Dam bill today appeared to be breaking away.

Accorded by a number of the house members from the upper Colorado river basin states on a series of amendments, which, if adopted, would prevent their opposition from being a mere protest against the bill.

This action, however, does not clear the way, as there is no indication that Arizona is prepared to abandon its fight against the measure.

Arizona's position is immediately to be announced by the upper basin states in a statement which will be made in the Senate chamber, and it is expected that the Senate will also announce its position on the bill.

Representative Felix Frankfurter, California, said today that he was confident that the Senate would act to support the bill.

San Diego Union, Tuesday Morning, March 16, 1926

Discussion of building and membership plans, election of three directors and reports of committees featured a meeting of members of the San Diego Athletic Club held in the Pompeian Room of the San Diego hotel last night. The meeting was attended by 200 persons unanimously indorsed the work of the board of directors and paid tribute to Dick Robinson for the efforts he has put forth in the interests of the club.

The reports showed that the organization is in good shape financially with assets of $310,000 and that with additional memberships which it is expected to get within the next 30 days will be in good shape to issue bonds for the erection of this building on the site owned by the club at Sixth and A Streets. Steps were taken to assure these new memberships.

Various speakers pointed out the need of an athletic club in San Diego and the value of such an organization to citizens and visitors.

Roger M. Andrews stressed the value of an athletic club to the community from an athletic and social angle. At the conclusion of his remarks a large replica of the proposed building was uncovered and showed a 12 story structure.

Robinson gave detailed information about the building plans of the club. He said the proposed building would cost from $425,000 to $460,000 to build and from $60,000 to $76,000 to furnish. He showed that it would contain many of the finest features of such a building.

The plans, Mr. Robinson said, call for a Class A reinforced concrete building. These plans were prepared by Architects F. W. Stevenson, W.H. Wheeler and I.E. Loveless.

Horace E. Rhoads, chairman of the membership committee, showed that the San Diego Athletic Club has already a membership of 600.

Roy Bielfuss, local realtor, declared that the site of the proposed building, owned by the club is worth approximately three times what was paid for it. "Real estate conditions have changed radically in San Diego in the last 60 days" he said.

Three new directors were elected last night to serve for three years each. These are: Horace E. Rhoads, Fred H. Jones and George Neal. These with the following comprise the board of directors: Roger M. Andrews, C.T. Chandler, Ed Fletcher, Dick Robinson, Claus Spreckels, F.M. White.

LAST CALL!

This is your last opportunity to secure a participating, transferable membership in the San Diego Athletic Club for the low price of $100.00, plus War Tax of $10.00.

On May 15 the price of these memberships will be increased to $150.00, plus War Tax of $15.00. In the event that the present allotment is sold out before May 15 the price will advance before that time.

Over 700 representative business and professional men of San Diego have enrolled as members of the San Diego Athletic Club. These men have realized the great value of such a club to the community.

Owing to the lack of space it is impossible to publish the entire list of these members. At the left, however, is a partial list.

Twelve years ago a participating, transferable Membership in the Los Angeles Athletic Club could be had for $75.00. Try to buy one now for $1000. Memberships in other clubs of Southern California are extremely high as compared with the price being asked for a transferable membership in the San Diego Athletic Club. Take the Pacific Beach Club of Long Beach for example. A transferable membership in this club costs $600 and the club will not be ready for occupancy until July.

By comparison with the prices asked in other cities the low price of $100 asked for a transferable membership in the San Diego Athletic Club is a genuine bargain.

On February 8, 2013 in Sacramento, California, the California State Historical Resources Commission unanimously found the property eligible for the National Register of Historic Places under Criterion C at the local level of significance.

The building is an excellent example of Late Gothic Revival and Art Deco architecture in the ziggurat form and the only example of this style in the City of San Diego. It embodies the distinctive characteristics of both styles and has maintained its character defining features and architectural integrity. The period of significance is 1928.

The property is nominated on behalf of its owner, Connections Housing Downtown LP. A Federal Historic Preservation Tax Incentives Historic Preservation Certification Application has been filed for an adaptive conversion to housing and health services that will meet The Secretary of the Interior's Standards if Conditions are met with regard to ceiling heights. The proposed rehabilitation will include the reconstruction of original 1928 entrance elements pursuant to original plans and photographs.

In its role as representative of the City of San Diego, a Certified Local Government, the Historical Resources Board (HRB) reviewed the nomination at its January 24, 2013 meeting. San Diego, San Diego County
Staff Report

The San Diego Athletic Club is a free-standing, twelve-story, concrete building located in the downtown core area of San Diego on a steeply sloping lot with a multi-directional slope. Two of the building's façades, the east and north, are street facing and fully visible; the west and south property line façades are visually blocked by neighboring buildings. The building was designed in an Art Deco Ziggurat and Late Gothic Revival style in 1928, was used as the San Diego Athletic Club from 1928 to 1964, and was converted to office use in 1969-1970. Most of the interior historic fabric and some of the exterior historic fabric was removed during this office conversion. The majority of character-defining exterior features above the third floor were retained and the ziggurat design of the building was unaffected. The building has retained its historic integrity.

The San Diego Athletic Club is eligible under Criterion C at the local level of significance as an excellent example of Late Gothic Revival and Art Deco architecture in the ziggurat form and as the only example of this style in the City of San Diego. The building embodies the distinctive characteristics of both styles and has maintained its character defining features and architectural integrity. The Athletic Club was constructed by the business and community leaders in San Diego in the early twentieth century as a social, business, and community club. It proposed to enhance life for all San Diegans through the formation of friendships and business partnerships and the promotion of San Diego's culture and climate. The period of significance is 1928, the year construction was completed.

The property is nominated on behalf of its owner, Connections Housing Downtown LP. A Federal Historic Preservation Tax Incentives Historic Preservation Certification Application has been filed for an adaptive conversion to housing and health services that will meet The Secretary of the Interior's Standards if Conditions are met with regard to ceiling heights. The proposed rehabilitation will include the reconstruction of original 1928 entrance elements pursuant to original plans and photographs.

In its role as representative of the City of San Diego, a Certified Local Government, the Historical Resources Board (HRB) reviewed the nomination at its January 24, 2013 meeting. The HRB and Mayor support the listing of the San Diego Athletic Club in the National Register and the Mayor's letter was received February 5, 2013. To date, no other letters of support or objection have been received.

Staff supports the nomination as written and recommends the State Historical Resources Commission determine that the San Diego Athletic Club meets National Register Criterion C at the local level of significance. Staff recommends the State Historic Preservation Officer approve the nomination for forwarding to the National Park Service for listing in the National Register.

Re: Nomination of the San Diego Athletic Club to the National Historic Register

Dear Dr. Roland-Nawi:

I am writing to nominate the San Diego Athletic Club ("SDAC") for the National Register of Historic Places. This listing would be the final step in the rehabilitation of this important historic landmark and tax credit project.

The City's Historical Resources Board designated the SDAC as a historical resource on September 23, 2004. This designation was based on its architectural significance as an "excellent example of Art Deco ziggurat skyscraper architectural style with Classical and Gothic overlay" It was designated under HRB Criterion C for its architecture and Criterion D as a notable work of Master Architects Frank Stevenson and William Wheeler.

On January 24, 2013, the Historical Resources Board unanimously approved staff's recommendation to nominate the SDAC to the National Register, as the building embodies a distinctive and significant architectural style, while retaining sufficient integrity, consistent with the criteria for the National Register. A copy of the staff report is attached.

Sincerely,

DESCRIPTION: Review the National Register Nomination for the San Diego Athletic Club

STAFF RECOMMENDATION

Recommend the listing of the San Diego Athletic Club to the Office of Historic Preservation. The 12-story free-standing building was designed in the Late Gothic Revival and Art Deco styles with the Ziggurat form by William H. Wheeler, Ilton E. Loveless, and Frank W. Stevenson in 1928. The building is located within the downtown core at the southwest corner of 6th Avenue and A Street.

BACKGROUND

This item is being brought before the Historical Resources Board pursuant to the Office of Historic Preservation requirement that the local jurisdiction be provided 60 days to review and comment on a National Register of Historic Places nomination. The San Diego Athletic Club is being nominated to the National Register of Historic Places under Criterion C at the local level of significance as an excellent example of the Late Gothic Revival and Art Deco architecture in the Ziggurat form and as the only example of this style in the city of San Diego. The City's Historical Resources Board designated the San Diego Athletic Club as a local landmark in 2004 (HRB #685) under Criteria C and D.

ANALYSIS

A National Register of Historic Places Nomination Report was prepared by Marie Burke Lia, which concludes that the resource is significant under National Register Criterion C. Staff concurs that the site is a significant historical resource under National Historic Register Criterion C as follows.

Development Services Department
1222 First Avenue, MS 512 • San Diego, CA 92101-4155

CRITERION C – Embodies the distinctive characteristics of a type, period, or method of construction or represents the work of a master, or possesses high artistic values, or represents a significant and distinguishable entity whose components lack individual distinction.

The San Diego Athletic Club was envisioned in 1924 to provide a social and athletic facility for the San Diego community. Founded by prominent members of the San Diego business community, the club operated for over four decades and offered a wide range of social functions that facilitated the business and cultural affairs of the City of San Diego. William H. Wheeler, Frank W. Stevenson, and Ilton E. Loveless were hired to design the building in the Late Gothic Revival style. While the design started with the Late Gothic Revival style, it evolved with the rise in popularity of the Art Deco style with Ziggurat detailing. The meddling of the two architectural styles was meant to showcase the past and future of the city. As soon as the club opened, it became a social and athletic club for the city. The club was primarily for men, but also provided facilities for women and families. The club managed to survive the Depression and remained open until the mid-1960s. The economic downturn forced the club to close and the building was sold in 1964.

Constructed in 1928 of board-formed, poured-in-place concrete, it was originally exposed with a smooth finish and unpainted. The east elevation consists of a central tower bay, with the main entrance, and two equally sized adjacent bays. The bays flanking the central tower are four stories while the sixth through twelfth floors are located within the central bay. The central bay steps back on each side at the fifth floor and the eighth floor on all sides creating a ziggurat shape.

The main entrance, in the central tower, features a decorative arch with a pair of wood framed doors. Above the doors is a San Diego Athletic Club shield supported by the figure of a man and woman on either side. The shield has the acronym SDAC below a shovel and pick ax with a bear portrayed at the bottom of the shield. Above the main entrance, spanning the central bay is a faux balcony with trefoils supported by carved pegasus brackets. The balcony is a replicated in a smaller format on the 8th floor. Decorative bands or sculpted friezes with variously designed plaques mark the roofline indentations at the fifth, ninth, and twelfth floors. The horizontal decorative band at the fifth floor contains intermittent medallions with a male profile. Beneath the twelfth floor gothic windows are circular designs cast in cement completed with center trefoils. At the parapet, a heavily decorated frieze exhibits variously designed plaques, divided by figureheads in cement. The roof is flat with parapets topped by a decorative design. A metal fire escape is present at the rear of the south elevation serving the sixth through the twelfth floors.

The first floor fenestration originally consisted of twelve relatively small multi-lite windows within the two bays and six similar windows on the north façade. Above the first floor windows on each bay on the east façade are six large arched windows with a repeating pattern on the north façade. The fourth floor features steel casement windows with transoms evenly spaced on both facades. The upper floors repeated the window design with paired windows evenly spaced on each wall plane.

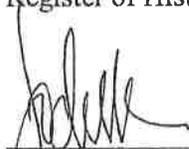

Between in 1969 and 1970, the interior spaces were converted into offices and the exterior was modified. The first floor windows were altered to have one continuous large window connected with the 2nd/3rd floor arched windows; the 2nd floor balcony was removed, the decorative front entrance was eliminated and squared, the windows on the upper stories were replaced with plate glass, and the building's exterior was painted. As part of the current rehabilitation, the owner is proposing to use the Federal Historic Preservation Tax Credit Program to restore the front entrance along with the second floor balcony and the balustrade on either side of the main entrance.

The building continues to retain a number of Late Gothic Revival treatments. The decorative Gothic arches in clusters of three on the twelfth floor, the attached shafts at the twelfth floor parapet and between the eighth and ninth floors, vertical moldings at the twelfth floor windows and the original second to third floor windows, rooflines terminated by small pinnacles and castellated battlements at the ninth and twelfth level parapets, and other decorative elements including shields, trefoils and medallions. All of these elements have been incorporated into the dominant Art Deco Ziggurat form.

Despite the modifications that have been made, the building retains a high degree of character-defining exterior features. The Late Gothic Revival treatments and Art Deco style with the Ziggurat form have been retained and were not impacted by the modifications. Staff recommends that the Historical Resources Board forward a positive recommendation to the State Historical Resources Commission.

CONCLUSION

Based on the information submitted, it is recommended that the Historic Resources Board forward a positive recommendation for San Diego Athletic Club to be listed on the National Register of Historical Places under Criterion C with a period of significance of 1928.
