DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (If known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Unaltered since it was built, the William Seabrook House is a two-and-one-half story wooden building with dormers over a raised brick basement. Double porticos feature pediment, slender columns, arched entablature. Double flights of steps leading to first floor portico gracefully disguise the high foundations. Iron stair railing decorated with initials of original owner. Over first floor entrance and in gable of portico are beautiful semieliptical fanlights, also sidelights at both front doorways and ornate transom over second floor entrance. Fascia and frieze boards outside porch area are in dentil pattern.

House plan consists of four rooms divided into pairs by a central hall which goes through house from front entrance to back garden foor. Unusual double stairways to second floor form wide arch which frames the garden door.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Built in 1810, this house established a distinct style of architecture which was reproduced, with minor variations, in plantation houses subsequently built on Edisto Island. It is the most ornate of the early Republican houses which remain on the island. Significant architectural features are: double tiered portico, arched entablature on upper level, decorative ironwork stair railing, ornamental facia and frieze boards in dentil design, double arched stairways in center hall. Tradition attributes design of the house to James Hoban, architect of the White House, who practiced in Charleston during 1790s.

William Seabrook, as part owner of the Edisto... Island Ferry, bought the steamboat "W. Seabrook" which performed ferry duty among the islands south of the city of Charleston during the early nineteenth century. One of the landings for this ferry was the Seabrook plantation which consequently became a significant transportation center.
