Architecture

91. This complex of log buildings is one of the clearest illustrations in the county of the use of log construction in the accretive increase of domestic space. Several building stages produced the two-storied main block in dogtrot form with a one-storied, single pen ell and a nearby single pen outbuilding. The significance of the group of log buildings is enhanced by the sensitive siting on a low rise above the bottom land in a bend of Drakes Creek in a manner representative of early nineteenth century attitudes of domestic siting. The house is the most distinguishe d of fifteen log structures along Drakes Creek.

ADDENDUM

Wa-91

The A. C. Davidson house is unoccupied and has been neglected, but it is in sound structural condition. Despite lack of recent maintenance, the roof is intact; despite the removal of weatherboarding in several places, the fabric of the log house is well-preserved; the stone chimneys show no signs of structural weakness.
