DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Hampton, on Wambaw Creek near the Santee River, was built by Noe Serre, a Huguenot settler. The original house was a four-room center-hall structure, with two more rooms on the second floor. The one-and-a-half storey frame building on raised brick foundations was 40 feet long and 34 feet deep, and had two interior chimneys. In 1757, the plantation came into the possession of Daniel Horry through marriage, and shortly thereafter he more than doubled the size of the original house. A second full storey with two new rooms was added, and extensions, each about 25 feet wide and 34 feet deep, were made to both ends, thus bringing the structure to its present size, 90'x34'. The present hipped roof, with two dormers in front and rear, was built over the entire house, and each new wing had a new interior chimney. The extension at the east end was taken completely by a large two-storey ballroom, and the new wing at the west end had a large two-storey master bedroom that extended from the south wall more than halfway through the house. In the rear of this chamber were two more bedrooms, situated one above the other.

The first and second storey windows had nine over nine light sash, and were adorned by exterior panelled shutters. Rather than leave the second storey front walls of the new extensions blank, and in order to preserve the symmetry so important in 18th century Georgian architecture, Horry inserted false windows, in the guise of closed shutters panelled like those below. This device also repeated in the north wall of the east extension. The first floor windows of the master bedroom in the west wing had interior primitive slat blinds, a device previously used in Charleston houses.

In 1790-91, the south facade assumed its present unified appearance, when a six-column wide giant portico and pediment were added across the center portion of the original house. The roof of the portico is supported by eight columns and two pilasters, made of solid pine. Rosettes, panels, and flutings adorn the frieze of the portico, and the pediment contains a circular window with four keystones. Forty feet wide, 20 feet deep, and floored with red tile, this giant Roman Doric portico is of particular interest because it reveals the slender columns, the paterae, and dainty flutings of the Adam style of the Federal period of this execution.

Hampton Plantation has recently come into the possession of the Department of Parks, Recreation, and Tourism, of the State of South Carolina, upon the death of that State's poet laureate, Archibald Rutledge, the house's last owner. A team of architectural historians are currently preparing a detailed report on the structure before undertaking what is expected to be an extensive restoration of the house to a former grandeur which has lately been lost to the ravages of neglect. The house, however, remains in good structural condition.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Hampton, erected in 1735, greatly enlarged after 1757, and with final additions made in 1790-91, is an excellent example of a modest-sized frame structure that evolved through organic growth into a large, unified Georgian frame country house. The structure includes one of the earliest examples of use of the giant portico in American domestic architecture, and Hampton is South Carolina's finest example of a large two-and-a-half frame Georgian plantation house.

Hampton Plantation
CONTINUATION SHEET

ITEM NUMBER 10 PAGE 1

The official national historic landmark boundary of Hampton Plantation consists of that perimeter of land today controlled by the South Carolina Department of Parks and Recreation. Although the original and historical extent of the plantation at Hampton was, of course, much larger than the 294 acres now administered by the State of South Carolina, that area of land does effectively protect the pastoral nature of the land from which sprang the plantation house at Hampton, and to which its character doubtless owes some debt.

The tract is bounded on the north by Wambaw Creek (some maps call it Hampton Creek), on the east by other parts of Hampton Plantation not in the hands of the State of South Carolina, on the south by Highway S-10-857, and on the west by lands now or formerly of Lucas and lands occupied by Hampton Church. This legal description, as well as an orange pencil line indicating the perimeter of the property, appears on the accompanying map, entitled "Map of Tract 'A' of Hampton Plantation" which was prepared for the South Carolina Department of Parks, Recreation, and Tourism, November 19, 1971, by Legare Hamilton, Registered Surveyor in South Carolina.

Near the center of Hampton Plantation property, is a 20 acre area of land identified as the Sam Hill Cemetery. While within the perimeter of the Hampton property of the South Carolina Department of Parks, Recreation, and Tourism, this area is in the hands of a local group of Black residences who are entitled to exercise certain rights over the land, owing to the use of the land by their ancestors going back to the days of slaveholding on the plantation. That area is part of the landmark.

The nature of the landmark enclosed by the 294 acre perimeter is that of an area which was once agricultural, but which has now been allowed to revert, to some extent, through the forces of nature, to something considerably less controlled. It is a mixture of grassland, swamp, and light forest, which could quite easily be returned (as it likely will be now by its new owner) to a plantation-like setting. The nature of the land within the 20 acre "Sam Hill Cemetery" lot is the same.

The accompanying USGS 7.5 minute map, also serves to locate Hampton Plantation in the Santee area. No structures other than the plantation house at Hampton contribute to the national significance of the landmark.
