Shirley Plantation is historically important because of its connection with the Carter family, prominent in the affairs of colonial Virginia, in the hands of whose descendants the property remains today. Originally settled in 1613 as "West-and-Sherley Hundred", the plantation was producing tobacco for export within three years, thus making it one of the very earliest of Virginia tobacco plantations. Colonel Edward Hill II acquired two tracts totaling 2,476 acres in 1660, which included the present property. His son, Edward Hill III, reputedly built the existing house in the early eighteenth century, perhaps as early as 1723. His daughter, Elizabeth, was married to John, eldest son of Robert "King" Carter, in that year. Seventy years later, their granddaughter, Ann Hill Carter, was married at Shirley to "Light Horse Harry" Lee, from which union was born Robert Edward Lee. Charles Carter, who owned Shirley in the early nineteenth century, was one of the largest landowners in Virginia with some 170,000 acres. At Shirley he had over 200 slaves.

Architecturally, Shirley is an interesting example of Georgian architecture. Exterior features include two-story porticos on both main facades; a double-hipped roof with a single pineapple finial; gabled dormers on all four sides of the roof; and a square, three-story brick central bulk with a deep denticulated cornice. The interior is marked by an unusually large entrance hall, with a hanging stair rising three flights; full paneling in a number of rooms; mantels, overmantels and ornate broken pediments over the interior doorways. The house has all original furnishings, including portraits of most of the prominent members of the family.

Besides the main house, about eight of the original dependencies survive, including twin storage houses, a smokehouse and a dovecote. The house which immediately preceded the present mansion remained standing until 1867. Re-erected three years later some distance to the north, it is now the mansion house of the neighboring plantation known as Upper Shirley.

Though still an agricultural operation and a private home, Shirley Plantation is open to visitors daily throughout the year.

Memorandum

To: Secretary of the Interior
Through: Assistant Secretary for Fish and Wildlife, Parks, and Marine Resources LP 4/14

From: ^{Acting} Director, National Park Service

Subject: National Historic Landmark recommendations, 61st meeting of the Advisory Board on National Parks, Historic Sites, Buildings and Monuments

Enclosed herewith is the memorandum of the Advisory Board on National Parks, Historic Sites, Buildings and Monuments summarizing its findings and recommendations on the National Survey of Historic Sites and Buildings partial theme study of "Colonial Architecture." This memorandum makes two principal recommendations: (1) That 77 sites encompassed by this study be declared eligible for National Historic Landmark status. These are listed under Sections A, B, C, and D of the memorandum; (2) That 41 of these sites be given further consideration in long range plans for addition to the National Park System.

We recommend that you approve the Advisory Board's memorandum, and that it be returned to this office to become a part of the permanent record of actions recommended by the Board and approved by you.
