DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The frame 2½-story Shingle Style Phillips House is basically a rectangular block with a 1-2 story wing projecting from the northwest section of the north (rear) facade. The building has a strong horizontal emphasis which results from the unrelieved expanse of the entrance (south) facade, the low, spreading gable roof, the broadly proportioned 2-story Ionic portico and the skin-like sheathing that seems to envelop the building. Horizontal bands of shingles in varied shapes differentiate between stories and reinforce the horizontality. Even the 3-story tower is treated more horizontally than vertically with its low, ogee-shaped roof covered with diamond patterned shingles.

The east and west elevations are totally dissimilar: the east end has a 1-story, screened verandah and a small projecting gable over a second-story bay window; the west end has symmetrical but dissimilar bay windows on the second story. The broadly projecting eave of the main roof's gable extends over these bays.

Single, semi-octagonal dormers are located on opposite slopes of the roof, one toward the west end of the front (south) slope; the other toward the east end of the rear slope. The roof line is also pierced with two brick chimneys with corbelled caps located on the rear slope.

The service wing projecting from the northwest portion of the rear facade has a 2-story section and a 1-story section. It is basically T-shaped with a recessed gallery along its west side. The roof configuration of the wing and the use of drop siding in several places suggests that a covered breezeway may have separated these two sections. Today, the wing is completely enclosed.

The only significant alteration to the Dr. Phillips House appears to be the 2-story Ionic portico that extends across much of the entrance facade. Prior to 1914, a smaller 2-story porch formed a gabled entrance pavilion. Removing the second-story deck required changing the second story door with sidelights to a tripartite window group. Today, what appears to be a window box supported by paired scroll bracketts, conceals this original feature. A raised brick terrace (date undetermined) extends across the entrance facade and connects to the screened verandah on the east side. The fenestration throughout the house appears to be original as do the window sashes except for the third story of the tower. It is not clear if that fenestration was originally glazed (as it presently is) or simply screened.

The interior also retains its original configuration except for the addition of several bathrooms early in the twentieth century. The irregular floor plan has a central hall extending the depth of

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Dr. Phillips House is significant as the residence of Dr. P. Phillips (1874-1959), one of Florida's most successful citrus producers during the first half of the twentieth century. It is also the only extant example of a Shingle Style residence in the City of Orlando, Florida. 1

Although the house has always been associated with Dr. Phillips, it was originally built in 1893 for Colonel Peleg Peckham<sup>2</sup>, a prominent seasonal resident and promoter of nearby Winter Park. Colonel Peckham, in conjunction with his daughter, Miriam Peckham McCallum, and son-in-law, Archibald R. McCallum, maintained additional homes in St. Louis, Missouri, and Newport, Rhode Island. The decision to move from Winter Park to Orlando was apparently related to McCallum's expanding legal practice in that city<sup>3</sup>. The families selected a large site on the northeast shore of Lake Lucerne on which to build this imposing. 2½-story Shingle Style residence. It was constructed under the direction of L. M. Boykin at a cost of $37,500.<sup>4</sup> Although Colonel Peckham died in 1894, it remained the McCallum home until after their deaths in the first decade of this century. The house was then purchased by C. E. Graham who in turn sold it in 1912 to Dr. P. Phillips.

Not long after acquiring the property, the Phillips hired L. Percival Hutton, a Philadelphia architect, to make some changes to the house. A new monumentally-scaled Ionic portico on the entrance (south) facade, replaced the original 2-story porch. Although well detailed with fluted columns and a full entablature, the widely spaced columns awkwardly positioned in front of the windows are not an entirely successful welding of a Colonial Revival portico to Shingle Style residence.

The Phillips were apparently patrons of the arts and frequently entertained many operatic and other musical personalities of their day<sup>9</sup>. These functions could easily be accomodated in a "dance hall" which was constructed on the rear of the property in 1918. 10 Coincident interior "modifications", adding bathrooms and installing central heat, would have made the house comfortable for their frequent the house with an open U-shaped stair at the left rear. Alterations appear to be largely superficial, e.g., plywood paneling; a new front door, removal of a built-in hall seat.

The house was originally part of a neighborhood of single-family residences which over looked Lake Lucerne, one of the many lakes which dot Orlando's landscape. The lot included a garage and dancehall on the rear of the property and ornamental gardens nearer to the house. The outbuildings have been lost as a result of the construction of an elevated expressway which took a portion of the north end of the original lot. Changing uses - served as a fraternity house for several years in the 1970's - have resulted in the loss of the other. The house itself has not been directly affected by the elevated expressway and remains in good condition. Although currently vacant and sealed to discourage vandalism, the building is owned and well maintained by the City of Orlando, which plans to restore the house for community activities.

Dr. Phillips, whose role as a physician remains obscure, 12 came to Orlando from Lebanon, Tennessee in 1903<sup>13</sup> and became one of Florida's leading citrus producers. 14 His enterprises embraced all aspects of citrus production from cultivation to packing and processing and employed a sizable number of people in Orange County. 15 Several innovative techniques in both the cultivation of citrus groves and production of citrus juices were developed by Phillips enterprises. 16 The accomplishments were promoted in a film produced under Phillips auspices in 1936. 17 The Phillips' citrus packing houses in the southwestern section of Orange County also provided the impetus for the development of much of the area's public road system. 18

Although Phillips died in 1959, the property remained in the family until 15 July 1974 when it was officially deeded to the City of Orlando by his son, Howard Phillips. 19
