Describe the present and original (if known) physical appearance

The John M. White House is a two-story, brick residence located on a landscaped lot in a commercial and residential area near the center of Fort Mill, South Carolina. It was constructed ca. 1872 for John M. White. The John M. White House displays elements of the Italian Villa style in its irregular plan and low-pitched, bracketed roof, as well as elements of the Second Empire style in its mansard-roofed central pavillion and decorative pedimented window hoods. The house has not been significantly altered and retains integrity of setting, location, materials, workmanship, and feeling.

ADDITIONAL INFORMATION

The John M. White House is a large, two-story, brick residence with an irregular plan. The low-pitched roof with eaves has a boxed cornice, carved modillions, and paired brackets with pendants. Decorative, stuccoed chimneys pierce the roof. The facade (west elevation) features a central, inset pavillion with a high-pitched, wooden-shingled, mansard roof; highly decorative metal cresting; hooded dormers with round-arched windows; and finials. A one-story, hip-roofed front porch with decorative balustrade and brackets shelters numerous pairs of French doors and a central, double-leaf entrance, all with transoms and full-length, wooden shutters. The second level of the facade features four-over-four windows with lug sills, lintels, decorative pedimented hoods, and wooden shutters.

The rear(east) elevation displays irregular massing, an enclosed, one-story porch, and irregular fenestration.

The right (south) and left (north) elevations are less ornate than the facade and display irregular massing and fenestration. The central core on the left elevation features a pedimented projecting bay with four-over-four windows, pilasters with moldings, and two recessed wooden panels:

There have been few alterations to the house. A side porch was extended and enclosed and a modern kitchen was added in the rear.

The interior of the house contains a wide entrance hall flanked by front parlors with French doors which lead to the front porch. A bedroom, dining room, kitchen, and sunroom complete the first floor. Upstairs are three bedrooms and baths. The mantels, doors, and woodwork are original. An interesting feature is the dining room mantel which incorporated old carved bedposts. The home is furnished and maintained in keeping with its period of construction.

A one-story, gable-roofed, brick cottage flanks the house on the north side. It was constructed around the same time as the main house. Tradition holds that it was the home of a former family slave who was repatriated to Africa and later returned to live with her former masters. The cottage is plain with a central entrance flanked by single windows. There is also a carriage house/ garage, portions of which appear contemporary to the house, and a modern storage building on the north side.

The John M. White House is currently used as a guest residence for Springs Industries Inc., whose corporate headquarters is across from this house on White Street. The area is maintained with trees, shrubs, and lawn. Various commercial buildings and offices line White Street; northeast of the house is a residential area. The large grounds provide an adequate buffer and an appropriate setting for the house.

Statement of Significance (in one paragraph)

The John M. White House, located in a commercial and residential section of Fort Mill, South Carolina, was constructed ca. 1872 for John M. White, member of a prominent family in the Fort Mill Area. The house displays the builder's awareness of the Italian Villa and Second Empire styles. The John M. White house is significant because it exemplifies the transition between the popularity of these two architectural styles, and because it was constructed during a time of political, social, and economic uncertainty in South Carolina.

John M. White purchased the land on which the John M. White House was constructed from his brother, David H. White, in August $1872.^1$ The house was probably built shortly after the purchase of the land.²

John M. White willed the property to his wife upon his death in 1877.³ His widow, Addie White O'Dell, sold the property to Leroy Springs for $2,500 in 1916.⁴ The house has been subsequently owned by various branches of the Springs Company.⁵

Architecture

construction and the second second second second

The low-pitched, bracketed roof, the irregular plan, and the front veranda of the John M. White House represent elements of the Italian Villa style, which was popular in much of the United States in the mid-nineteenth century. Also evident are the mansard-roofed, central pavillion with arched windows, and the decorative, pedimented facade windows which reflect the Second Empire style. The combined use of elements of these academic styles represents a transition between these architectural styles, which are unusual in upper South Carolina.

The John M. White House is also significant in South Carolina's architectural history because it was built, with all its style and elegance during the struggle to recover from the devastation of the Civil War. 6
