Overview of Area C, looking west-southwest. The bunkhouse, with its shed-roof extension, is in the left foreground.

A portion of an outbuilding is seen in the front right corner.

A berm on which the barabaras, outhouse and toilet pits are located is directly above the bunkhouse.

Close-up of the barabaras seen in Photo 6. The dwellings dimensions are 11' x 12' x 2½' deep; the most visible remains are lengths of shiplap lumber once used for the walls and roof. Photo 10 shows the barabara before the roof collapsed.

This view, taken from atop the bluff just northeast of the bunkhouse, looks southeast into a ravine. The remains of the easternmost barabara, well hidden by vegetation, are located in the center of the photo, on the far side of the ravine. The barabara remains are also shown in photos 9 and 10; the north shore of Amakchak Bay is in the background.
