The Nathaniel Treat House, built during the 1830's, represents a transitional phase between the Federal and Greek Revival styles. It is one of the several fine examples of 19th century architecture located on the main street of Orono.

The original iron grille fence separates the sidewalk from the 120' frontage of the lot.

The exterior of the house is well balanced. Four chimneys, two centered on each gable end, are built as part of the brick walls. A portico with balustrade, supported by fluted Doric columns and pilasters, is centered in the front. In a recessed doorway, two sidelights flank a wide, paneled door above which is a shuttered fanlight circling a leaded glass fanlight.

The windows on the first two floors are recessed and have granite lintels and sills. The gable ends above the second story are of white horizontal planks and each end has two, two-sash windows. A dentil decorated boxed cornice extends around the house at the level of the second story ceiling.

On the south side of the house is an open porch, the roof of which is supported by Doric columns. From the porch, there is a side entrance to a clapboard ell addition.

Two other additions, neither of which is visible from the street, were made to the rear of the house about 1972. First: a glass enclosed, one-story porch was added which can be entered from the drawing room; the dining room (originally the kitchen) and the present kitchen in the ell. Its beamed roof is supported by Doric columns. Second: the rear roof was raised to accommodate one large dormer with six standard windows and one large picture window.

A garage is situated at the end of a driveway about thirty feet from the southeast corner of the house. On either side of both front and rear doorways is a pilaster and boxed cornices with dentils extend around the garage. The garage is of red clapboard except for white horizontal planks over the doorways.

The main entrance of the house opens into a hall featuring a delicate flying staircase against a curved wall. Hand tooled woodwork around the doors and windows varies in design from room to room throughout the house. Other significant original woodwork includes the paneling beneath the windows, the Indian shutters and the low dado in the dining room. Six of the eight original fireplaces are operable. The fireplace wall in the original kitchen is paneled and incorporates a minister's closet. This fireplace once contained a dutch oven.
