State significance of property, and justify criteria, criteria considerations, and areas and periods of significance noted above.

The Eddings Point Community Praise House, built c. 1900, is significant as one of four known extant praise houses on St. Helena Island. It is historically and culturally significant for its central place in the religious and social life of the black islanders; it also represents a vernacular architectural form that has survived since the antebellum era.

Although the praise house is a religious property, it is eligible for the National Register, because it possesses architectural, historical, and cultural significance.

For additional information on the significance of praise houses, see the statement of significance for the Mary Jenkins Community Praise House nomination, included in this multiple property submission.
