INTRODUCTION

The Wigle Cemetery is an excellent example of a small, rural family cemetery. Located on the land claim of John W. Wigle, it was established for use by the extended Wigle family during a period of early Euro-American settlement in rural Linn County and was used by the family for burials for four generations. It was listed on the Linn County Register of Historic Resources in 1995.

SETTING

The Wigle Cemetery is located approximately seven miles northeast of Harrisburg and eight miles southwest of Brownsville, in rural Linn County, Oregon (Township 14S, Range 2W, Section 31). It is located on the north side of Belts Drive, west of this road's intersection with Tub Run Road. It is surrounded by farmland, largely planted in grass seed. A short distance to the east are the Cascade foothills; the I-5 freeway is located about one and three-quarters miles to the west. A series of hills known as Indian Head, the most notable geophysical feature in the area, is north of the cemetery about one mile. Bond Butte can be seen to the northwest. The Abraham and Mary Wigle House (listed on the National Register in 2003) is located southwest of the cemetery across Belts Drive.

FEATURES AND CHARACTERISTICS

The cemetery encompasses approximately one-fifth of an acre, measuring about 75 feet by 75 feet. The land is basically flat and level and the cemetery is surrounded by a wire fence. There is a large maple tree located in the southeast corner of the cemetery (a second large maple tree fell during a storm in 2003). The cemetery is maintained by the Wigle family descendants, who over the past couple years have cleared out brush and cleaned up the gravesites.

The cemetery is laid out in an orderly fashion in six rows north to south. Markers are predominantly headstones facing west; there are also some foot markers. There are 21 markers and a number of unmarked depressions. A survey conducted of Linn County cemeteries in 2000 identified individual tablet and monument type markers. Materials were primary marble and granite, although there was also at least one example of a white bronze (sometimes referred to as zinc) marker. Among the decorative carvings on the headstones is at least one Woodsmen of the World symbol. A few of the older tablet markers have been damaged over the years. Efforts to preserve them have resulted in having them set in concrete lying flat on the ground.

There are a total of 28 burials in the cemetery. The earliest recorded burial was in 1857, although there may have been an earlier unrecorded burial (the ODOT survey of cemeteries indicates the date of earliest burial as 1853; this has not been confirmed). All of the burials, except one, occurred between 1857 and 1929. The most recent occurred in 2000 with the burial of Charles Wigle (in a plot on the north side of the cemetery). With the exception of Margaret Kauble, all of those interred in the cemetery are related to the Wigle family.

At one time, a number of Kizer family members were also interred in the Wigle Cemetery. They were exhumed around 1918 and moved to another cemetery. The Kizers were related to the Wigles through marriage – Mary Wigle (daughter of J.W. Wigle) was married to Francis Marion Kizer.

INTRODUCTION

The Wigle Cemetery is an excellent example of a family cemetery in rural Linn County. It meets the National Register Criterion A and Criterion Consideration D for its association with the early Euro-American settlement and development of this area of the county and its exceptional ability to illustrate broad patterns in our history. The period of significance for the cemetery is from 1857 to 1929. This period represents the time from the first recorded burial to the last burial during the historic period (there has been only one burial since 1929, which occurred in 2000).

THE WIGLE FAMILY AND SETTLEMENT IN LINN COUNTY

Euro-American settlement in what would become Linn County began in the mid-1840s when John Packwood settled near the present town of Scio and John Crabtree and his family settled on land adjacent to Packwood in 1845. Linn County, which stretches from the Willamette River in the valley to the Cascades ridgeline, was officially created in December 1847 by the Provisional Government. Prior to Euro-American settlement, the land was occupied by the Calapooia Indians.

The 1850 census showed 173 families living in Linn County. A number of settlements had begun to develop by then including Lebanon, Brownsville, Oakville, Albany and Harrisburg. When the Wigle family arrived in south Linn County, the population of Harrisburg was about 100.

In 1852, thirty-three members of the Wigle family and a number of hired hands emigrated to the Oregon Territory from Adams County, Illinois. Patriarch Jacob Wigle decided to move to Oregon so "that his children might secure homes and all settle near him." Jacob and his wife, Nancy Hunsaker, had seven children: Abraham (who was married to Mary Daugherty) was the eldest, followed by Catherine (married to Guilford Barnard), Peter (who married Nancy Ford), Mary (who married Francis Marion Kizer), John L. (who married Eliza White, the daughter of nearby settler Luther White), Margaret and Anna. In addition to Jacob and Nancy and all of their children, the family migration included Jacob's brothers, John and George, and their families.

As often occurred when entire families immigrated together, many of the relatives settled near each other. Donation Land Claims were secured by Jacob, John, and Abraham Wigle, as well as Guilford Barnard, in 1853 in an area that is approximately seven miles northeast of Harrisburg and eight miles southwest of Brownsville. Like other early immigrants in the Willamette Valley, the Wigles settled near the foothills on the valley floor.

The Wigle family members were active in early settlement activities in the area and contributed to the area's development. A number of family members reportedly taught at the Diamond Hill School, the first school in the immediate area, over the years. In 1869, Abraham entered the ministry of the Universalist church and organized the first Universalist church west of the Rocky Mountains. In July 1871, he was ordained in the ministry by the Rev. D.I. Mandell of Massachusetts. In 1875, with the assistance of Rev. E.A. McAllister and Rev. Abiel Morrison, Abraham organized the first Oregon Universalists' State Convention, which met near Abraham and Mary's house. Abraham was elected secretary of the State Convention, a position he held for a number of years. Abraham was well-known throughout the area, "possessing the friendship and confidence of all."

THE WIGLE FAMILY'S CEMETERY

The Wigle Cemetery is located on land that was part of the John W. Wigle land claim. It is unclear why the cemetery was located on John's land as opposed to one of his relatives (the first known burial was that of the infant son of his nephew Abraham in November 1857). It is possible that this was the highest point of elevation on their farms, which were located on the valley floor in an area that a number of seasonal streams drained into nearby Muddy Creek. It is also possible that John selected it as the place he wanted to be buried and had designated it as the family cemetery prior to 1857 (John was the second burial in the cemetery in February 1858).

For over seventy years, descendants representing four generations of the Wigle family used this cemetery for family burials. From 1857 to 1929, there were perhaps as many as thirty or more burials associated with the extended Wigle family. Records show that there are now twenty-seven graves remaining in the cemetery (it is not known exactly how many Kizer family members were relocated to other cemeteries). Although Wigle family descendants continued to farm the surrounding land for decades after, family members no longer chose to be buried in the small family cemetery, opting for larger cemeteries located nearer towns and cities where other family had eventually settled. No new burials occurred until 2000, when Charles Wigle was buried there (making a total of twenty-eight known gravesites).

The property upon which the cemetery is located was sold by John W. Wigle's widow in 1875. At that time, she sold 160+ acres to her son, Jacob H. "save and except about one fourth acre now fenced and used as a grave yard." In 1916, Jacob and his wife, Maranda, transferred the title for 132 acres to their son, James "Edward" Wigle. At that time, the deed did not mention the cemetery. In 1966, Bertha Wigle, Ed's widow, transferred title of half this property to each of two children and their spouses – William and Emma Wigle, and George and Clara Reed. Clara Wigle Reed was the great granddaughter of John and Catharine Wigle, the original owners of this land claim. When Clara passed away in 2000, her property was willed to her daughter, Janet Reed, who lives in Portland.

HISTORIC CEMETERIES IN LINN COUNTY

Cemetery records for Linn County indicate that there are almost 90 historic cemeteries located throughout the county. These include a range of sizes from small family burial plots (with only a few burials) to large cemeteries located in or near cities (with several hundred burials). The earliest date to the late 1840s (Riverside Cemetery [Albany], the White Cemetery [near Diamond Hill], and the Wisner Cemetery [near Stayton] all date to 1847; the Allphin Cemetery dates to 1848), although most of the historic cemeteries date to the 1850s and 1860s. A number of them were established by local chapters of fraternal organizations, primarily the Masons and the Odd Fellows. Some are associated with specific ethnic groups, such as the Jewish cemetery in Albany and the Norwegian cemetery at Mountain Home. Many of the cemeteries began as small family burial grounds.

National Park Service

Small family cemeteries were common during the early Euro-American settlement era, especially in the rural areas of the county. Towns, if they had established cemeteries, were often too far for a family to conveniently use the town cemetery. Occasionally a country church had a cemetery, but these were rare in Linn County. Hence, there were a number of small family cemeteries that were established during the 19th century. Only a handful of them retain a high degree of historic integrity and clearly illustrate the small family cemetery of the early Euro-American settlement period in Linn County. In addition to the Wigle Cemetery, there is also the Michael Cemetery, the Brattain Cemetery, the McHargue Cemetery, and the White Cemetery.

Family cemeteries in rural Linn County tended to be quite small, typically a quarter-acre or less. They were often located on the family's land in a spot that was somewhat protected from the elements and less likely to be valuable farmland. The layout and design of these small burial grounds were often fairly simple and included a fenced site with plots laid out in rows. Landscaping was usually kept to a minimum and may have included an occasional tree or small shrubbery. Most family cemeteries were small enough that they did not include roadways for carriages and usually didn't have specific pedestrian pathways. Occasionally a family cemetery was decorated with a metal gateway that includes the family name.

Grave markers in these family cemeteries were similar to markers used in all cemeteries in the Willamette Valley of Oregon. Earliest burials were often marked with small tablet type headstones or individual monument style markers. Materials were often stone (granite or marble), but may have been white bronze (which was sometimes referred to as zinc). Families were able to order markers either from near-by merchants or from mail-order sources. Burials were sometimes limited to the immediate family, but often included burials of an extended family and, on occasion, members of neighboring families who did not have their own burial grounds.

THE WIGLE CEMETERY AS A HISTORIC FAMILY CEMETERY

The Wigle Cemetery exemplifies a small family cemetery in Linn County. It occupies approximately one fifth of an acre of land located on the original land claim of a Wigle family member. It is a simple, fenced site with six rows of plots in which there are 28 burials. All but one are of the original family members who settled in the area and their descendants. Landscaping is minimal and includes an old maple tree in one corner (a second tree blew down in a storm a couple years ago). There are no established roadways or paths. Markers are primarily of the tablet and monument style, made from marble and granite. There is one white bronze marker; there are flat markers on the more recent graves. Inscriptions and iconography are typical for the period.

The Wigle Cemetery is a well-preserved example of a rural family cemetery in Linn County. It retains a very high degree of historic integrity compared to other early family cemeteries in the rural portions of the county. Unlike many others that have been compromised by continued growth and development, the Wigle Cemetery looks and feels today much like it did 75 years ago. It is in good condition thanks to the careful maintenance recently undertaken by family descendants.

The Wigle Cemetery is eligible for listing on the National Register under Criterion A for its association with early settlement and patterns of development in rural Linn County and meets the standards for Criterion Consideration D for its exceptional ability to illustrate this association. It should be considered locally significant.
