Hanks' Dugouts
Wayne County, Utah
Capitol Reef National Park MPS

Description

The Hanks' Dugouts are located in the north central portion of Capitol Reef National Park approximately six miles south of the Visitor Center. They are on the south side of Pleasant Creek and roughly .4 miles south of Sleeping Rainbow Ranch. Features at the site of Hanks' Dugouts consist of the remains of three dugouts, and at least one other unidentified structure.

The dugouts are all collapsed; elements of log or pole roof structures are evident. The above-ground structure appears to have been of stone construction. The area around the structures is scattered with ceramics, glass, and other archeological artifacts. Other evidence of habitation, including a wagon road, the possible supports for a feed trough, and fences. The remains of a wagon are scattered across the site.

Other than deterioration over time, they have undergone no discernable or documented alterations, and the site itself appears remarkably undisturbed since the historic period.

Statement of Significance

This nomination is part of the "Capitol Reef National Park Multiple Property Submission." Hanks' Dugouts are associated with the historic context "Mormon Settlement and Agriculture in Capitol Reef National Park, 1880-1946."

Hanks' Dugouts originally served as the residence of the Ephraim K. Hanks family. The dugouts are the only surviving resources from Hanks' settlement on Pleasant Creek which was known as the Floral Ranch. The period of significance is from the date of Hanks' arrival in 1883 to 1888 when the family built a four-room frame house and most likely abandoned the dugouts.

Ephraim K. Hanks settled on Pleasant Creek in April 1883. According to Hanks' son, Sidney, the family first lived in a dugout, although Hanks' widow disputed this claim when she filed her final Homestead Act affidavits in 1899. She stated, instead, that the family built a one-room log home when they settled on the property. The 1895 government survey of the area clearly indicates the presence of a residence in this location occupied by Sidney Hanks.

The dugouts were typical of early Mormon construction in remote settlements. Lack of information about climatic conditions and the feasibility of agriculture meant that Euroamerican pioneers usually viewed their initial settlement as temporary. Dugouts were relatively easy and inexpensive to build and could be abandoned if the agricultural pursuits failed. In the case of the Hanks family, their settlement succeeded and the dugouts were abandoned in favor of the more permanent, and presumably comfortable, wood frame house.

The remains of the dugouts and other structures at the site appear largely undisturbed.
