The Allen Glover Vault, a Greek Revival structure, contains burial places for thirty people. Fifteen crypts open on the east side and fifteen crypts open on the west side. It is a square structure, made of brick which has been stuccoed over and painted white. The stucco is scored to give the appearance of large rectangular blocks.

A portico surrounds the main block of the structure. At each of the four corners stuccoed masonry walls support the entablature. On each of the four sides three Doric columns are set in antis. These columns are of iron and rest on square pedestals of brick. The roof is hipped and topped by a granite cross.

The yard around the mausoleum is surrounded by a high ornate iron fence of Gothic design. The spears of iron, which make the fence palings, rusted in their sockets and most have disappeared, leaving only the posts standing. The iron Gothic gate which bears the date 1858 is still intact.

The Glover Mausoleum is one of the largest and most imposing mausoleums in the state. Its size, the use of Greek Revival architecture and the rarity of above-ground burials in the Black Belt section of Alabama add to its significance.

The Mausoleum was constructed by Mary Ann Diven Glover, the second wife of Allen Glover, some time after his death in 1840. An exact date of construction is not known, but references to the mausoleum establish that it was constructed in 1856.

Allen Glover was one of the founders of the city of Demopolis. A pioneer merchant and extensive planter, he moved to Marengo County in 1819 from South Carolina, bringing with him his family, several brothers, his slaves, flocks and herds. They bought lands, erected log dwellings, a school house, and stores. Glover traded with the Indians and slowly established a great planting interest.

Until the vault was built, the body of Sarah Serena Norwood Glover, his first wife, and possibly the body of Glover himself were buried at Gaineswood.

Allen Glover gave each of his children a plantation and a home. The Riverside Cemetery of Demopolis was part of the plantation of Anne Gaines Glover Lyon (the first child of Allen Glover by his second marriage). She gave the Riverside Cemetery portion of her plantation to the City of Demopolis for use as a cemetery.
