The William Miller House is a two-story frame, asymmetrical plan, five bay, Queen Anne style residence built ca. 1890. The house was originally built with a one-story full width shed porch on the main facade with milled columns. These columns were replaced ca. 1915 with the present Tuscan columns. With this exception no other major changes have occurred to the house since its construction.

The house has a brick foundation, hipped roof of composition shingles, interior brick chimneys, and weatherboard siding. The main entrance has an original frame and glass single light door. Windows are original one-over-one rectangular wood sash. At the southeast corner of the residence is a projecting one-story octagonal wing with a conical roof. This wing has a sheathing of fishscale shingles and weatherboard siding and fluted molding above the windows.

The main section of the house has a sheathing of fishscale and butt wood shingles on the second story. In the west bay of the second story is an incised porch set within a horseshoe opening. Leading to this porch is an original single light glass and wood door. The central bay of the second story has paired one-over-one sash windows. At the roofline is a clipped gable dormer with a semi-circular stained glass attic window. At the rear facade is a one-story porch with Tuscan columns.

The interior retains its original floor plan and the majority of its original detailing. This includes molding around doors, a milled newel post and staircase, and Queen Anne influenced mantles.

The house is sited on a rectangular urban lot in a residential section of Hodgenville. At the rear of the house is a ca. 1940 gable roof frame shed which is included as a non-contributing building. On the main facade is a hollow core concrete fence which was erected ca. 1915 and is included as a contributing structure.

PROPERTY TYPE: Urban Residential Architecture

The William Miller House is significant under criterion C as a notable example of the Queen Anne style. This residence was built ca. 1890 during a period of growth and development in Hodgenville and is a fine example of a Queen Anne style residence. The house features an unusual projecting towered wing on the main facade and has original wood shingles, doors, and other detailing. The only major change to the house has been the replacement of porch columns which occurred in the 1910s.

Constructed ca. 1890, this house was built as the residence of William Miller. Miller was a businessman who entered into banking during a period of economic development in Hodgenville. Miller served as cashier of the Larue County Deposit Bank and was later president of the Farmer's National Bank. Miller and his family resided at the house until the early 20th century. The Shacklette family has owned the house for the past several decades.

A second period of significance is ca. 1915 which reflects changing styles of the period in porch construction. Tuscan columns often replaced original Queen Anne columns in the early 20th century as the Colonial Revival style grew in popularity. The William Miller House is a good example of this stylistic change. In addition to the residence the hollow core concrete block fence is also included as a contributing structure. This fence is a good example of hollow core concrete block construction and was erected ca. 1915 by the Miller family.
