Name of Property: Avondale Historic District
County and State: Tallapoosa County, Alabama

Narrative Description

The Avondale Historic District developed c. 1900 – 1910; c. 1919 - 1954 and includes 496 resources of which 423 are contributing and 73 are non-contributing. The district includes two distinct portions that developed virtually simultaneously: the Avondale Mill Village which was built and operated by the Avondale Mill Company; and the adjacent Oak Lawn neighborhood which was not company owned, but its residents worked for the mill, and the houses are essentially identical to those in the mill village. The mill village contains 167 resources built c. 1919 - 1954 including mostly workers' houses, a superintendent's house (Inv. # 408), as well as a textile mill which is still operational (Inv. # 341), and two mill churches (Inv. #s 343 and 344) located immediately on the Central of Georgia railroad tracks. The tracks form the eastern edge of the mill village and divide it from the privately developed Oak Lawn area.

Oak Lawn contains the remaining 329 resources (c. 1900 – 1910 through 1954) including a small, but significant, row of c. 1920s-40s commercial blocks on 8th Avenue adjacent to the tracks (Inv. #s 10-17). East of the commercial area, the Oak Lawn residential neighborhood developed c. 1900 to 1954 and consists of mostly one story wood houses essentially identical to styles in the mill village, one warehouse (Inv. # 50), a park (Inv. # 171), two vernacular churches (Inv. #s 105, 347), many duplexes, one triplex (Inv. # 241), and a store on 6th Street (Inv. # 295). There are also four commercial buildings along the district's northern edge of Hillabee Street including a one story late 1930s brick veneer building (Inv. #s 355), and three c. 1940s – 1950 two story brick veneer or brick veneer and concrete block buildings (Inv. #s 357, 360, 361).

The district is bounded on the west by Lakeland Avenue and Rose Avenue, on the east side by Scott Road, by Hillabee Street on the north, and on the south by Maple Street in the mill village and 7th Street in Oak Lawn. It includes a diversity of working class residential styles including Type B, E, P, O and N as identified by Christopher ver Planck in his study of Southern textile mill villages, but is primarily dominated by styles not identified in the study. Included are many simple Craftsman style bungalows; and vernacular single dwellings or duplexes including shotguns along Iris (Inv. #s 362-364, 368), Beach (Inv. # 316), Laurel (Inv. # 392), Oak (Inv. # 418), Verbena (Inv. # 461), and Woodlawn Avenues (Inv. #s 489, 493), two T-plan houses (Inv. #s 24, 87), c. 1920s-1940s houses with basements (Inv. # 103), c. late 1930s - 1940s Craftsman style duplexes (Inv. #s 108, 110), c. 1940s - 1954 Minimal Traditional (Inv. # 104, 105, 134, 135, 139, 143), and several c. 1950-1954 bungalows (Inv. # 204) or Ranch styles (Inv. # 142, 174, 180, 212, 271). There are also four c. 1930s-1940s Tudor Revival style houses concentrated on 12th Avenue (Inv. #s 106), 13th Avenue (Inv. #s 145, 161), and Maple Street (Inv. #s 408, the superintendent's house), and one house with Spanish Revival and Craftsman influences (Inv. # 130). There is one store, four churches two of which were built by the mill (Inv. #s 343, 344) and one built c. 1950 (Inv. # 105), eight commercial buildings on 8th Avenue adjacent to the tracks known to residents as "The Alley" (Inv. #s 10-17), as well as four additional commercial structures on Hillabee Street.

One c. 1900-1910 house remains on 10th Avenue (Inv. # 64). The mill itself was begun c. 1919 and remains (Inv. # 341), and there is one c. 1919-1920 house (Inv. # 394) on Laurel Avenue. There are also eight c. 1950-1954 houses including one brick cottage (Inv. # 252), three Minimal Traditional houses (Inv. #s 143, 223, 224), and four early Ranch style houses (Inv. #s 142, 174, 212, 271). The remaining 485 resources were built during the 1920s, 1930s, 1940s.

Most houses are one story single dwelling or duplex, but there is also one triplex (Inv. # 240), one two and one half story house on 8th Avenue near the "Alley" (Inv. # 3), and two two-story duplexes (Inv. #s 342, 369). The primary building material is wood, though the one part and two part commercial blocks are brick or concrete block and they have flat roofs. Houses overwhelmingly have front, side, or cross gables including many tin or tin shingle roofs (Inv. #s 64, 92, 237, 316). There are also a number of hip or pyramidal roofs including one house with a cross hip (Inv. # 246), and many houses include a distinctive gable on hip design many of which are concentrated on Central Avenue (Inv. #s 325 – 331) or Central Avenue Circle (Inv. #s 333 – 340). In addition, many have a "fan" designed front gable vent (Inv. #s 1, 72, 95, 99, 113, 151, 156, 242), and most have a front porch or stoop. Craftsman style wood elements include mostly exposed rafter tails and knee braces. Windows are typically 2:2 or 6:6 double hung wood, and foundations are brick or concrete. There are very few intrusions into the neighborhood. Some houses have c. 1960s aluminum or vinyl siding or aluminum windows most of which retain their major historical characteristics; and a few also have enclosed porches which render them non-contributing.

Description of Mill Village Housing Types:

The Avondale Historic District contains several identified mill village types, according to Christopher ver Planck's study of Southern mill villages. Where the inventoried houses match the description herein, they will be identified only by that "type." Only those individual characteristics that differ from the defined type will be specified in the Inventory, while the most differentiating characteristics of each type are highlighted below:

Type B – One story wood duplex with a rectangular floor plan and a side gable roof. The façade is characterized by a) two centrally located adjacent doors which are flanked on the outside by b) 6:6 window, and c) the chimney is usually in the center of the house. It has d) brick pier foundation, and e) shed roof porch. Some were modified without the rear shed. Entrances that have been removed are noted as such for all duplex types.

Type E – One story frame duplex with a) L-shaped floor plan, b) single entry flanked by a 6:6 window, c) 6:6 window in the ell, d) shed roof porch, e) centrally located chimney, and f) brick pier foundation.

Type N – One story single family Craftsman style bungalow with front gable, a) two 6:6 windows and a single entry and b), subsidiary front facing gable-roof porch with exposed rafters. There is usually a central corbelled chimney.

Type O – Identical to Type N except that the porch is on the right bay.

Type P – One story single family Craftsman bungalow with a) front gable roof, b) centrally-located gable roof porch that extends almost the entire width of the front, c) centrally located door flanked by two 6:6 windows, d) and exposed rafters.

Archaeological Component

Although no intensive survey has been conducted in the area, the potential for subsurface material remains.

INVENTORY

8th Avenue

1. Duplex. 65 8th Avenue. (c. 1930s)
One story duplex with side gable asphalt roof, one central brick chimney, and plain weatherboard exterior. There is a brick foundation, 3:1 double hung wood windows, and central front porch with a gable, wood rafters, and a "fan" shaped wood vent. The right door is missing, and there is a one-story weatherboard shed with front tin gable and shed addition.
2. House. 91 8th Avenue. (c. 1920s; c. 1960s)
One story unusual style L-plan house with side gable metal roof, one interior brick chimney, and one end brick chimney. There is c. 1960s aluminum siding, partial wrap around porch with pairs of flared wood columns on brick piers, and pairs of 9:9 double hung wood windows with decorative wood framing and shutters. The property includes an open front c. 1960s attached carport.
3. House. No # 8th Avenue. (c. 1920s; c. 1940s)
Two and one-half story house with c. 1940s asphalt shingles, two decorative dormers with eight lights and clipped eaves. There is one interior brick chimney, one tall end decorative brick chimney, brick pier with concrete block foundation, and a central front porch with gable on hip roof and three square wood columns on brick piers. Windows are 12:12 double hung wood, and 15:15 double hung wood on the first floor with a c. 1940s metal awning. There is also an original wood carport and exterior concrete walls.
4. Duplex. 145 8th Avenue. (c. 1940)
One story bungalow with front gable asphalt roof with wood rafters throughout, and one interior brick chimney. There is plain weatherboard exterior; 2:2 horizontal double hung wood windows, front porch with a gable, and an original wood and glass door.
5. House. 157 8th Avenue. (c. late 1920s)
One story central passage house with asphalt shingles, one side gable and two front gables, and one interior brick chimney. There is a brick pier with concrete block infill foundation, 2:2 double hung wood windows, and a front porch with a shed roof and square wood columns.

Statement of Significance

Community Planning and Development

The Avondale Historic District is significant under Criteria A, Community Planning and Development, for its planned cotton textile mill village, and unplanned development of Oak Lawn adjacent to it. Both were built for Avondale Mills's workers and together grew into a district of over 400 historic resources by 1954. The village itself was laid out and designed by B. B. Comer, owner of the Avondale Mills Corporation, primarily between c. 1919 – 1940s. Built for curb appeal, the village developed around a system of irregular streets many of which were curvilinear and some of which included winding cul-de-sacs. It also includes a c. 1919 mill (Inv. # 341) as well as two 1938 churches (Inv. #s 343, 344) built facing the railroad tracks, typical Southern mill workers' houses, and a c. 1940 supervisor's house (Inv. # 408). At the same time, across the railroad tracks, private developers built Oak Lawn between c. 1920s – 1954 using identical housing styles as in the village. They also built a c. 1920s commercial enclave known as the "Alley" virtually in the center of the district (Inv. #s 10-17), four c. late 1930s – 1950 commercial buildings on the north edge of the district (Inv. #s 355, 357, 360, 361), a park (Inv. # 171), the district's only warehouse (Inv. # 50), and two vernacular churches (Inv. #s 105, 347).

Architecture

The Avondale Historic District is significant under Criteria C, Architecture, for its excellent examples of mainly c. 1919 – 1954 residential, industrial, religious, and commercial textile mill architecture. Predominant residential styles include standard mill housing types as identified by Christopher ver Planck (see Section 7), simple c. 1920s-1940s bungalows and duplexes, one triplex (Inv. # 241), c. 1940s – 1954 Minimal Traditional houses (Inv. #s 143, 223, 224), and c. 1950 – 1954 weatherboard or brick veneer early Ranch styles (Inv. #s 142, 174, 212, 271). The district also contains one c. 1900 – 1910 vernacular worker house (Inv. # 64), c. 1919 mill (Inv. # 341), two excellent two story 1938 mill churches (Inv. #s 343, 344), a one story 1948 vernacular churches (Inv. # 347), c. 1950 one story vernacular church (Inv. # 105), c. 1940 Tudor Revival style supervisor's house, c. 1920s commercial strip (Inv. #s 10-17), and four simple weatherboard or brick veneer c. late 1930s - 1950 commercial buildings (Inv. #s 355, 357, 360, 361).

Historical Narrative

In 1901, the Alexander City Cotton Mill was established by D. L. Lewis and Brother of Talladega, Alabama, ("Downtown Alexander City Historic District" National Register nomination, p. 12.) with a $65,000 subscription. J. C. Maxwell, president of the Alexander City Bank, had been instrumental in persuading the out-of-town concern to establish a textile mill in the city. The Lewis brothers subsequently let contracts to Miles & Bradt of Atlanta, Georgia, for the mill building, and to J. A. Cullars of Auburn, Alabama for construction of cottages for its workers along Maple Street (Ibid). None remain extant.

The mill, which produced yarn and woven ticking, was later sold to the C. E. Riley Company of Boston who continued to operate it as the Alexander City Cotton Mill until July 1919. That year, the mill was purchased by Avondale Mills, a textile company which had been founded in 1897 in Birmingham by Braxton Bragg Comer, Alabama's governor from 1907 to 1911. Acquisition of the Alexander City Cotton Mill meant that the Avondale Mill Company owned a total of eight textile plants around the state (Schremser, Avondale Mills," p. 178). By 1936, the company owned 14 plants employing some 7,800 people, with an annual payroll of $8,000,000. It also consumed 275,000 bales of cotton each year. (Driggers, p. 3)

B. B. Comer and his sons, who followed him into the management of the mills, believed strongly in Christian ideals and paternalistic capitalism. B. B. Comer said he established the mills as "a civic enterprise . . . to help give employment to those badly in need of it. . ." He was described by one source as being interested in "the human side of industry" (Driggers, p. 3). It is, Comer said, "the desire on the part of the management of Avondale Mills to prove that there should not be disunion, hate, greed, selfishness, or unconcern on the part of capital or labor toward the other party. As the sun and rain cooperate to give us grain, so must labor and capital cooperate to give us prosperity" (Ibid, p. 5). By the 1930s – 40s, however, Avondale Mills was the largest employer of child labor in the state and was severely criticized by reform-minded organizations. (Flynt, p. 97)

After Comer's acquisition of the company in 1919, he changed the name of the Alexander City plant was to Bevelle in honor of one of his daughters. Within the first month of operation, Comer had installed additional looms and the following month, he established a new picker room. In September, the company added a brick addition to the mill (Inv. # 341) along with more looms which was, by then, operating under electric power (Manufacturer's Record, July 31, 1919, August 7, 1919, and September 11, 1919). In 1920, Avondale Mills enlarged the extant mill building with weave-shed, warehouse, and cloth room additions, constructed by J. R. Serrine Engineering of Greenville, South Carolina (Inv. # 342) (Ibid., 1920). One year later, 200 looms were added to the existing 304 (Ibid., April 28, 1921). Three years later, the company contracted with J. E. Serrine Engineers of Greenville, South Carolina to enlarge the mill village and build additional warehouses (Manufacturer's Record, May 17, 1923).

By the end of the first year, the plant had 350 employees operating 6500 spindles. The first manager of the Bevelle Plant was the Governor's eldest son, Donald Comer, who came to be known affectionately by many residents as "boss." He remained director of Avondale's Alexander City operations until his death in 1935 (Saxon, Alexander City, Alabama, 125th Anniversary; Saunders, p. 43).

The year Governor Comer purchased the mill, the village had over 100 inhabitants mostly on Maple or Willow Streets ( Ferguson) many of whom had been employed by the Alexander City Cotton Mill. That same year 49 residents of the new Bevelle Mill Village petitioned the Probate Court of Tallapoosa County to organize it as a municipal corporation (Petition to the State of Alabama, pp. 1-3). Upon incorporation, Comer began a major expansion of the village north, south and west of the already existing mill.

Throughout the 1920s – 1940s, the company built its worker village. "Charming is the word for Avondale Mills' Bevelle village," according to a 1937 issue of Alabama magazine. By then, it continued, there were 216 workers houses. "But not mere growth in numbers is Bevelle's pride," it said. "Constant improvement has made its 'village' idyllic in summer, cosy [sic] in winter, attractive all the year." More than that, every house had baths, running water, "modern conveniences," [and] most of them have gardens and shrubbery" (Alabama, p. 9).

At its peak in the 1940s, the village included over 220 houses for some 600 and 800 residents (Ibid.; "National Register of Historic Places," p. 13), as well as two large two-story churches (Inv. #s 343, 344) located prominently facing the railroad tracks just north of the mill (Inv. # 341). With the exception of one large, relatively well articulated two story duplex located between the mill (Inv. # 342) and the churches, no residences were built along the tracks. This lay out separated workers' residences from the churches and mill, and visually highlighted the mill's strong connection to its religious structures.

Comer believed strongly in the benefit of good landscape and curb appeal, which he effected through curvilinear streets and irregular block sizes. Every block, in fact, has a unique shape and size and all but one has at least one curved street side. Others include dips and turns especially around Laurel Avenue, and along Central Avenue Circle at the north edge of the village. According to mill resident, Laura Oliver, workers were required to keep the houses and yards neat. Most workers' houses had dirt yards, which residents had to sweep in the direction of the mill. They also were required to pull up any grass that might interfere with the orderly appearance of the yards. While supervisors' houses always included large grassed yards, it was not until the c. 1950s that a company women's group organized a grass-planting program for workers' yards (Oliver). The company also, by the 1930s – 40s, painted the lower portion of workers' front yard trees, a Southern rural tradition that appealed to workers (Ferguson).

Across the tracks, the Oak Lawn neighborhood developed during the 1920s-1954 simultaneously with the mill village. While residents there worked for the company, Avondale Mills did not own the land or develop it as part of the mill village. The focal point of the neighborhood was a commercial row built c. late 1920s, known as the "Alley" that private developers built immediately east of the tracks virtually facing the mill and mill churches. Because the company never built a commissary for its workers, the "Alley" served workers both in the mill village and in Oak Lawn. It includes six simple one story one part brick commercial blocks (Inv. #s 10-16), and one two story two part commercial block with a second floor apartment located (Inv. # 17). Until at least the 1970s, there were grocery stores there from which clerks typically delivered goods to workers' homes and stored them in residents' pantries. There were also, at various times, beauty and barbershops, shoe stores, cafes, furniture stores, and 5 & 10 stores (Oliver).

Oak Lawn grew north, south, and east of the "Alley, and by 1954, included over 300 houses. Unlike in the mill village, the streets were laid out essentially on a flat grid. Most houses were single family wood bungalows in styles essentially identical to those in the mill village, but there were also some duplexes and a number of c. 1930s- 1954 minimal traditional styles. There is also a c. 1940 park (Inv. # 171), two c. 1940s vernacular style churches (Inv. # 105, 347), triplex (Inv. # 241), one store on 6th Street (Inv. # 295), and four late 1930s - c. 1950 stores on the north edge of the neighborhood along Hillabee Street (Inv. #s 355, 357, 360, 361).

Whether workers lived in the mill village or in Oak Lawn, they had access to the company's generous palette of services and amenities including schools, churches, and recreational facilities. Since its inception in 1901, the earlier Alexander City Mill had operated a school, employing one or two teachers. After Avondale Mills' 1919 acquisition, the company continued to run the school in a private residence on Maple Street. In 1923 or 1924, the company built a school building, but within two years, it had been damaged by fire, and the company contracted to rebuild it (Manufacturer's Record, April 12, 1923). When completed, it offered classes in band, piano, fine arts, home economics, and physical education in addition to its scholastic curriculum. A nursery for pre-school aged children was also provided in connection with the school and, whenever possible, to children outside the mill. By 1925, the school's library was reported to have met the requirements for a recognized junior high school. (The Avondale Sun, "Bevelle School News") According to residents, the mill school offered exceptional education. Resident Laura Oliver recalled that when she was a child and transferred from the mill school to public school her teachers announced to her class that, because she had been educated by the mill, she was likely more advanced than they (Oliver).

Fully accredited in 1940, the now demolished (c. 1960s) school became part of the Alexander City school system and included grades kindergarten through nine. It also offered industrial training for males and females. Classes for men prepared them for promotions while courses for women oriented toward domestic skills. During the 1950s, moreover, a college scholarship program was offered to students interested primarily for Auburn University and Birmingham-Southern College, funded by the Avondale Foundation and based on scholastic achievement (Martin).

The company's belief in education also extended to its black workers. According to Donald Comer in a 1947 speech, of the "8500 employees of Avondale and affiliated mills in Alabama, one-twelfth . . . are Negroes. They are on exactly the same basis industrially as the white employees. They have the same opportunities to share in profits, to own homes and farms, to enjoy recreational and school facilities, and to save their money." (Smith, p. 21) In the early 1920s, the company built the Bevelle Colored School which held classes for grades one through six. In addition to providing classrooms, the school served as community center for the eighteen black families who lived in the Avondale Colored Village built southwest of Maple Street which. After the school closed in 1938, black students attended the Alexander City Colored School. Neither the school nor the African American village remains. (Saunders, 48)

Throughout the 1930s, 40s and early 50s, unlike many companies around the nation, Avondale Mills did not scale back its operations. Instead, it continued to expand amenities to its employees. In 1930, a recreation and athletic program was initiated to provide both men and women's basketball teams. ( Martin). In addition, baseball games were held at the village's Byers Field which maintained a full time athletic director ("A Bit of History," p. 4). In 1937, "employes [sic] of the Bevelle plant . . . and . . . citizens and friends of Alexander City" built a swimming pool and bath houses (Birmingham News 9-2-37), and named them in honor of J. Fletcher and Helen B. Comer. Lifeguards and swimming instructors were also provided (Martin).

Avondale also built recreational facilities for all its employees state-wide, black and white. Recreation camps were built on Alabama's Coosa River as well as in the woodland hills of North Alabama. In Panama City, Florida, Camp Helen resort was built for mill workers. It included a central building surrounded by guest cottages, boating and fishing opportunities, and various planned beach parties (Smith, p. 26). None of these resources remain.

During the 1920s-40s, the company built a number of supervisors' houses along Maple Street at least one of which remains (Inv # 408). At the same time, in 1938, it built two large churches side by side north of the mill facing the railroad tracks (Inv. #s 343, 344). B. B. Comer Memorial Methodist Church was established in 1919 near the Bevelle Mill where its present c. 1938 church stands; and G. L. Comer Memorial Baptist Church, named in honor of an uncle of the governor, was chartered in 1934. Its present sanctuary was built also in c. 1938 in a style very nearly identical to the Methodist Church adjacent to it. (Ibid., 49)

By then, the village had a scout hut and outdoor skating rink, pool room, domino room, and bowling lane which no longer remains. The company provided band concerts, "Opretta," and full time dancing and singing instructors. It had also built a cannery and furnished it with large canning machinery so that villages could can their own food. Three large pastures with stalls were maintained for those, according to resident Laura Oliver, who wished to have "milk cows or to raise their own pork." In addition to that, "rows of garages were built throughout the village for those employees who owned an automobile (Oliver notes). None of these remains. Once a year until the late 1950s, Comer set aside a day to tour the mill, the village, and its facilities. According to Oliver, on that day "everything was in tip-top condition, including all the trees in the village. They were white washed up to about 4-5 feet." The families, she believed, "had a lot of pride in their homes and village, not only on Inspection Day, but throughout the year. The ladies, [in turn], formed a Beatification Board and turned many of the yards into a fairyland of flowers and shrubs" (Ibid).

In 1941, Avondale Mills began implementing an impressive profit sharing system. According to Donald Comer, it was one of his father's original ideas (Smith, p. 25):

This is the way our profit sharing system works. First, we pay the going wage. That is the wages current in the area where our mills are located. From earnings the management deducts 5% on the investment. Profits beyond that are split between company and employe[sic] on a 50/50 basis. . . . The system is on a four-week basis with thirteen payments a year. The amount paid is based on the profits figured on the previous twelve weeks. We think there is an advantage in paying the bonus monthly instead of yearly. Each month when the employe gets his bonus check he has an immediate remind of how the business is going. he incentive is thus ever recurring.

According to Comer, by April 30, 1947, over 7000 employees around the state participated in the plan. By then, the company had paid out over $3,000,000 to employees or over 29.70% of each employee's wage. In addition, the company's Old Age Retirement Plan totaled nearly $4,000,000 for employee's retirements, and its credit unions "organized under Federal government auspices" contained approximately $1,000,000 in deposits. This represented, according to Comer, "amounts saved by employes[sic], helped, of course, from accumulation of the bonus profit sharing" (Ibid, pp. 24-25).

The plan also enabled more than 1,100 Avondale employees around to state, including in Alexander City, to purchase their homes. In fact, Donald Comer noted that, "[o]ne of the [his father's] constant ambitions for his employees was to help them buy a home . . . ." By 1947, he said, most were "completely paid for [and] . . . there have been no losses or foreclosures (Ibid, p. 24). Less that 25 years later, J. Craig Smith, a Comer grandson, said that "more than 80 percent of those associated with Avondale Mills come from home-owning families" (Smith, p. 18).

Such outstanding statistics were undoubtedly tied to the company's impressive prosperity during the 1940s. According to local historian Bob Saxon, War World II fueled a huge need for war products made by the mills requiring them to "run at full capacity" and to hire more workers. A December 1945 Birmingham News went even further. From a headline which read "Alexander City building Boom Carrying out Postwar Plans" the article following said that the city's mills had successfully produced many valuable war products, which in turn stimulated textile jobs, a critical housing shortage, and finally a housing boom (Saxon, p. 62; Birmingham News, 12-25-45). As a result, many new bungalows (Inv. # 67, 148), duplexes including Inv. # 65, a rare for the district two-story building, and minimal traditional style houses (Inv. #s 137-138, 151-153) were built in the district. In addition, its only warehouse (Inv. # 50), and park (Inv. # 171) were constructed, as were two new commercial buildings on Hillabee Street (Inv. #s 357, 361), and its third church was built in 1948 (Inv. # 347).

The town's noticeable economic vitality and growth continued throughout the 1950s, according to articles in the Birmingham News in 1952 and Montgomery Advertiser in 1956, that both credited the mills for its good fortune. As a result, eight new houses were built by private developers between 1950 – 1954 including one brick cottage (Inv. # 252), three minimal traditional houses (Inv. #s 143, 223, 224), and four early Ranch styles (Inv. 142, 174, 212, 271) were built in the district. Its fourth church (Inv. # 105), a c. 1950 vernacular building was constructed, and a its last commercial building went up c. 1950 on Hillabee Street (Inv. # 361). At the same time, the company continued to sell its homes to workers, and by the mid-1970s, that process was apparently complete. By then, too, company reports showed that the Alexander City plant was financially strong and had become one of Avondale Mills' biggest plants. In 1974, it was in the process of adding sophisticated computerized systems and adding new looms. Sales were reported up 56% from the previous year, and up 45% from its previous record high (Alexander City Outlook).

Today, the mill continues to produce textiles, and its importance to Alexander City's economy remains essential. Reporting on the terrible national recession of the late 1970s – early 1980s, the Birmingham News wrote an article about the town whose headline read "Alex City: An Oasis in recession's desert," once again applauding the advantages of Russell and Avondale Mills. Today, the Avondale Historic District remains very much intact with few demolitions or vacancies anywhere in the district.

X. Geographic Information

Verbal Boundary Description

The boundary of the Avondale Historic District is shown on the accompanying map entitled "Avondale Historic District," drawn to scale 2004.

Boundary Justification

The boundary of the Avondale Historic District has been drawn to include as many contiguous contributing resources as possible and to exclude as many non-contiguous non-contributing resources as possible. The district includes all such resources remaining from two distinct neighborhoods, the Avondale Mill Village and Oak Lawn, which are separated only by railroad tracks. Both developed primarily c. 1920s-1940s with very similar vernacular mill and working class mostly residential styles thus creating a single neighborhood that is visually and architecturally consistent and intact.
