DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Located on the east side of State Highway 553, approximately four miles south of the community of Church Hill, Mississippi, Woodland Plantation is a 230-acre tract of which less than 100 acres is cultivable because of the hilly terrain typical of the region. Traditionally a hay farm which supplied cattle fodder to local land-owners, the property continues to be planted chiefly in hay, in addition to pecan orchards and numerous live oaks, magnolias, cedars, camellias, and crepe myrtles. A pair of the latter flank what had been the terminus of the driveway opposite the front steps of the house, before it was rerouted in an S-curve through the grounds. Outbuildings include a large barn, tractor shed, workshop, garage, and two tenant houses, all constructed after restoration of the property was begun in 1936. Of much earlier date are a brick cistern house and a brick gable-roof structure of undetermined use adjoining the garage.

Facing southwest on rising ground, the residence at Woodland Plantation is supported on brick piers and foundation walls, its facade stuccoed and the remaining sides clapboarded. The eaves of the gable roof extend beyond two brick chimneys on the southeast elevation and three on the northwest. The original or main block of the house is one-and-one-half stories in height, connected at the rear to flanking one-story wings which replaced an earlier kitchen. Six dormers (three each on the front and rear roof slopes) are also additions; other windows are six-over-six, double-hung sash with louvered blinds.

Exterior architectural embellishment is concentrated in the undercut gallery which spans the facade on six box columns, its perimeter doubly defined by a fan-patterned balustrade and a soffit grille of lancet arches with trefoil stops. The grille was also formerly applied to the eaves on the side elevations in the manner of bargeboards but was removed during restoration. The treatment of the fenestration of the five-bay facade is of classical inspiration, the entrance being flanked by pairs of jib windows and set within a Greek Revival frontispiece of side lights, transom, and pilasters supporting a full entablature.

The first-floor plan of the original block consists of a central hall 15 by 35 feet, with two rooms on each side. The second floor, accessible by an enclosed quarter-turn stairway with winders located at the right of the entrance, was formerly a single space but is now divided into bedrooms, bathrooms, and storage. A sun porch extends across the first floor of the rear elevation, having been enclosed from what was the back gallery, as indicated by an exterior door casing and a jib window still in place. Original interior finish includes plaster medallions centered in the twelve-and-one-half-foot ceilings; door and window openings framed by pilasters and shallow pediments; and panels beneath the windows on the side elevations. The molded architrave with corner blocks surrounding the door leading from the sun porch to the kitchen wing is the only one of its type in the house and may have been retrieved from the demolished kitchen. Paneled sliding doors connect the two nineteen-foot-square parlors, both of which are equipped with wooden mantelpieces carved in the Adamesque manner. These are replacements, but one of the originals is believed to be the wooden model with reeded pilasters, paneled frieze, and richly molded shelf located in one of the tenant houses. The two rooms opposite the parlors feature identical Greek Revival mantelpieces in black and gold marble.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Woodland Plantation, with its antebellum acreage intact, has been for nearly a century and a half a source of visual and historical continuity in the story of the "Maryland Settlement" at Church Hill, Mississippi. The home of a member of the locally prominent Wood family for the three decades preceding the close of the Civil War, the property was relinquished during Reconstruction and for many years thereafter was subject to conditions which typified the region's ruined plantation economy, including physical deterioration and mortgage foreclosure. Derelict by the time of the Great Depression, Woodland Plantation in 1936 became one of the early examples of a major residential restoration in the Natchez area. The plantation house itself is of intrinsic interest as a basically vernacular form incorporating dimensions and detailing normally associated with more stylistic architectural expressions.

The history of the Wood family in Church Hill began in 1812 with the arrival of Colonel James G. Wood (1770-1845), his wife, and children to join the "Maryland Settlement," as the colony of emigrants from the tidewater of that state came to be known. The Wood home was Auburn Hall (nonextant), and family connections resided in the neighborhood at Oakwood (demolished ca. 1965) and The Cedars. Colonel Wood was appointed judge of probate for Jefferson County and by the time of his death had accumulated a sizable estate, one of the executors of which was his son, Robert Young Wood, born in Prince George's County, Maryland, in 1809. In 1837, for $18,000, Robert Y. Wood purchased a 224-acre tract several miles south of Church Hill from Abner E. Green (Deed Book D:37). (With the exception of six acres which were added in 1858, the purchase constituted Woodland Plantation as it exists today.) In 1839, Robert Y. Wood was married to Virginia P. Smith, born in New Brunswick, New Jersey, in 1819. Local tradition attributes the building of the Woodland Plantation residence to Robert Y. Wood in the two-year interim between the purchase of his property and his marriage, a construction date consistent with the physical evidence. Also, beginning in 1840, the couple's family Bible recorded the births of their children over the years "at Woodland." The configuration of the house is that of a cottage, with chimney shafts penetrating the side eaves of the gable roof which, on the front, shelters an incised or undercut gallery. The unpretentious form is thus an effective foil for the exterior academic features (Greek and Gothic Revival) applied to it, and also seems deceptively out of scale with the imposing spatial volumes it contains.

Robert Y. Wood was forced to sell Woodland Plantation immediately after the Civil War for $10,000, less than $3500 of which was paid in cash, with the balance unsecured (Deed Book L:312). He and his wife thereafter lived at

8 - SIGNIFICANCE

Woodbourne, also in Church Hill, until both died in 1882, but the aftermath of war continued to be felt in connection with the Woodland estate as late as 1906. In that year, Sandy Wood, son of Robert Y. Wood, petitioned the U.S. Court of Claims to award the compensation unsuccessfully sought by his father "for property destroyed and taken by the Federal army during the late Civil War." (Chancery Clerk, Jefferson County, Mississippi. Document 1215: "In Re Estate of Robert Y. Wood deceased: Petition for Letters of Administration. Filed 6/22/06.") Whether or not the claim was awarded was not indicated.

In 1879, Woodland Plantation came into the possession of the trustees of Jefferson College, a preparatory school at Washington, Mississippi, which was chartered by the territorial legislature in 1802 as the first educational institution in Mississippi. During the years of Reconstruction, Jefferson College also acted as a lending institution for the surrounding region, and Woodland Plantation was conveyed to the college when its owner, Mary A. Foster Lloyd, defaulted on a loan of $2500 (Deed Book HH:588). In 1889 the college sold the property for $1800 to Mary A. Foster Lloyd's mother, Ann L. Foster (Deed Book QQ:184), who then held title for the second time, the first being in 1866 when she bought Woodland Plantation from Robert Y. Wood. After passing through a series of ownerships, the estate was in ruinous condition when purchased in 1936 by Philip Heath Marble (1890-1965), an engineer and executive with Gulf Oil Corporation in Texas. Marble and his wife undertook a complete restoration of the property, including additions to the house (which was furnished in period pieces) and the construction of a number of service buildings. Their daughter, Phyllis Marble Thomas, sold the property to the present owner in 1974.

In light of accepted preservation practice, certain features of the Marble restoration of the Woodland Plantation residence now appear debatable (the loss of the earlier kitchen wing, for example, and the addition of dormer windows to the main block). Executed before the present philosophy became current, however, the project remains a valid preservation document of its own time, one which made the survival of Robert Y. Wood's Woodland Plantation possible.
