Describe the present and original (if known) physical appearance

The Voorhees College Historic District is located just southeast of the town of Denmark, South Carolina. This district includes the older portion of the campus in which the majority of the buildings date from 1905 to the mid 1930s. Six of the properties in the district are outstanding historically or architecturally. Seven other properties are also significant in these areas. Of the nineteen properties included in the historic district, thirteen, or 72 per cent, contribute to its historic or architectural fabric.

Key properties contributing to the character of the historic district:

- Booker T. Washington Hall. Built in 1905 as the Booker T. Washington Hospital, one of the first hospitals in the area, this building was designed by Professor Wilson Cooke from Claflin College in Orangeburg and was built totally by blacks. This two story brick building features Tuscan columns supporting a one story porch across the facade, dentil molding and a leaded glass fanlight.
- Blanton Hall. Two and one half story brick building with curvilinear gables, tracery windows in the dormers, arcaded portico and corbeled chimneys. Built in 1914 as the administration building, Blanton Hall now houses faculty offices, the financial aid office and classrooms.
- Menafee Trades Building. A gift of Mr. Ralph Voorhees, the Boys Trade Building was built in 1907 and later named for Martin A. Menafee, treasurer of Voorhees College and husband of Elizabeth Wright, the founder of Voorhees College. Two story brick building with one story wings on right and left elevations. Projecting pavillion with corbeled cornice and hipped roof cupola on facade.
- St. Philip's Episcopal Chapel. This 1935 chapel was built completely by Voorhees masonry students. The chapel features a steep pitched gable roof, brick buttresses and many decorative brick motifs.
- Grave site of Elizabeth Evelyn Wright. Burial place of the founder of Voorhees College. Elizabeth Evelyn Wright Menafee was buried here in December, 1906.
- Bedford Hall. Built in 1912 as a dining hall, this one story brick building features curvilinear central gable, metal shingled roof with polygonal cupola and decorative string course above windows. Named for Rev. R. C. Bedford, aide to Booker T. Washington and member of the first board of trustees of Voorhees.

Other properties contributing to the character of the historic district:

- Wright Hall. This three and one half story brick building was constructed in 1932 as a dormitory. It was named for the founder of the college and features casement windows and a corbeled brick cornice.
- Massachusetts Hall. Built in 1930, this large two story brick building was the first brick academic building on the Voorhees campus. It was named for the Massachusetts diocese of the Episcopal church. This building houses an 800 seat auditorium.

Statement of Significance (in one paragraph)

Voorhees College, located adjacent to Denmark, South Carolina, was founded in 1897 as Denmark Industrial School by Miss Elizabeth Evelyn Wright. The Voorhees College Historic District is comprised of thirteen buildings built between 1905 and 1935. The district's significance is derived from its importance as a pioneer in higher education for blacks in the area and from its association with Elizabeth Wright, teacher, humanitarian, and founder of Voorhees.

Elizabeth Wright's determination to establish a school modeled after her alma mater, Tuskegee Institute, began while she worked her way through the institute. After several failures in other small towns in the vicinity of Denmark caused by prejudice, arson, jealousy, and ignorance, Elizabeth Wright came to Denmark and tried once again to found her training school for poor children of her race. Under the patronage of such broad-minded residents as Senator S. G. Mayfield and Mrs. Ellen Kennerly, for whom the first building was named, and with the invaluable material and spiritual support of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Voorhees of Clinton, New Jersey, the school moved to a permanent home just outside the town limits of Denmark in 1901. Throughout her life Miss Wright was constantly in communication with Booker T. Washington, who guided her efforts with specific instructions, letters of recommendation, and donations from friends of the black education movement.

In 1902 the name of the school was officially changed to Voorhees Industrial School in honor of the Voorhees's generosity and in 1904 Voorhees was incorporated by the state legislature. A normal and industrial school was established in 1929 as the first step in higher education for teachers. Voorhees School and Junior College, as the school was known in 1948, was the only high school for blacks in Denmark. In 1950, in cooperation with state officials, an Area Trade School was established on land donated by Voorhees School. The final name change came in 1962 when the school became Voorhees College. The high school was discontinued in 1965. In 1967 Voorhees College began offering a four year program and in 1968 it was fully accredited as a liberal arts college by the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools.

Since the days when Elizabeth Wright walked from church to church seeking donations, Voorhees had had its financial problems, but in 1923 the school came under the protection of the Protestant Episcopal Church and the American Church Institute for Negroes. Shortly after this affiliation the students themselves built the school chapel, St. Philip's Chapel, with funds donated by the Women's Auxillary of the Protestant Episcopal Church and trustee Major W. B. Moore.

EDUCATION

Voorhees College was founded by Elizabeth Evelyn Wright in 1897 for the education of poor black children in South Carolina. Consciously following the example set by Booker T. Washington at Tuskegee Institute, Miss Wright stressed vocational education for her students. For some time the Voorhees Training School provided the only high school for blacks in the area. The later junior college and four year programs were leaders in higher education for blacks. Constant self evaluation and improvement have continuously raised the level of Voorhees's educational standards in order to provide a quality college education for black students from all geographic areas and several foreign countries.

SOCIAL/HUMANITARIAN

Elizabeth Wright's determination to establish a school for poor blacks based on the ideals of her mentor, Booker T. Washington, for whom the 1905 hospital was named, never wavered even in the face of anger, distrust, and prejudice. Her high ideals inspired those who worked with her as well as her benefactors. In 1923 Voorhees became affiliated with the Protestant Episcopal Church and the American Church Institute for Negroes which provide the chief support for the college today.

ARCHITECTURE

The architectural significance of the Voorhees College Historic District lies in the sophisticated styles and elements used in building this early twentieth century black college. The district also draws architectural significance from the fact that many of the buildings were built solely by the students of the school. In keeping with Booker T. Washington's theory of education, Voorhees students learned skills such as masonry and carpentry which could be used to obtain jobs. As the original frame buildings burned, Miss Wright saw the advantage in replacing them with safer, more durable brick buildings. These new buildings had such fine details as leaded glass windows, curvilinear gables, dentil moldings, decorative brickwork, and cupolas. These buildings were not simply utilitarian but reflected an admiration for architectural design and a desire to master masonry techniques.
